Southeast Asian Urbanism

Southeast Asian Urbanism

The Meaning and Power of Social Space

Southeast Asian Urbanism is based on the results of over two decades of field research on cities and towns of Thailand, Sri Lanka, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Singapore. The connections between micro and macro processes, between grassroots interactions and urban structures, between social theory and empirical data are analysed to provide a vivid picture of the great variety of urban forms, the social creativity in the slums of Bangkok, Manila or Jakarta, the variety of cultural symbolism and the political and religious structuration of urban space.

The book is written in the tradition of German or European sociological research from Marx and Weber to Habermas and Bourdieu. The work on Southeast Asian urbanism was carried out within the research programme of the Sociology of Development Research Centre of the University of Bielefeld in Germany, but also during teaching and research assignments at Chulalongkorn University, the National University of Singapore, the Science University of Malaysia, the National University of Malaysia, Andalas University, Padang, the Population Studies Centre at Gadjah Mada University, the University of Indonesia, the University of the Philippines and the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, Singapore.

The book will be of interest to urban anthropologists, political scientists and sociologists, to students of Southeast Asian history, culture and society, to urban planners and policy makers.

Hans-Dieter Evers is Professor of Development Studies at the University of Bielefeld. H. R. Korff is Professor at the Faculty of Development Science at the National University of Malaysia.

The Indonesian Town Revisited

The Indonesian Town Revisited reflects the growing interest in new towns and the urban sprawl around Jakarta, the economic crisis and its effects on the construction sector. Further a new direction in research is related to the growing interest in middle range cities. Some well-established topics are also covered, such as kampung improvement, urban conservation and migration.

Imagined Differences

Hatred and the construction of identity

The book addresses key concepts of modern anthropology like “difference” and “identity” in the light of ethnographic evidence from various local settings stretching from Morocco to Indonesia. As the antagonistic and destructive aspects of social identification are also discussed, the book is a contribution to conflict theory, it provides elements of orientation in a world marked by a proliferation of ethnic movements and of nationalisms which become more narrow and more aggressive.

Muslim Traditions and Modern Techniques of Power

This volume deals with historical and contemporary articulations of the relation of tension between the civilizing impetus of Muslim traditions, and modern forms, fields and techniques of power. These techniques are associated with the process of state-building, as well as with the related constraints of disciplining, normative cohesion, control of the territory and monitored social differentiation.

International Relations in the Asia-Pacific
 New Patterns of Power, Interest, and Cooperation

The book deals with the changing pattern of international relations in the Asia-Pacific region at the turn of the century with particular reference to the roles of the United States, ASEAN, Japan, China and Australia. Attention is also given to multilateral cooperation fora such as APEC, ARF and CSCAP. The first part consists of an evaluation of international relations theories and their meaning for the analysis of structures and actors in the Asia-Pacific. In the second part renowned experts present detailed case studies. The analysis is not based on a single theoretical approach but employs different perspectives.

The Kurdish Conflict in Turkey
 Obstacles and Chances for Peace and Democracy

The kidnapping and condemnation of the PKK Leader Abdullah Ocalan represent a turning point in the development of the Kurdish problem in the Middle East. Although the Turkish state achieved a strategic victory, the Kurdish conflict is yet to be politically solved. The question whether the Turkish state elite will be willing in this new context to change its repressive policy against the Kurds and assume a new political orientation remains open.

In the current volume social scientists from different disciplines analyse the various dimensions and aspects of the Kurdish conflict. At the core of the interest are the controversy on the political implementation of violence, the relevance of the international law for the conflict, the regional and foreign relations of the PKK, and the chances and obstacles of a peaceful democratic conflict resolution.

Germany's Africa Policy Revisited
 Interests, images and incrementalism

Although Germany has been a major international player in Africa ever since its readmission to international politics after 1955, surprisingly little has been written about this topic – and even less reliable knowledge has been established. “Germany’s Africa policy revisited” firstly poses the need for a review of Germany’s relations with the African continent over the past decades. Secondly it presents a challenge to fill in some of the factual gaps which characterize the state of research so far. Thirdly, it calls for scrutiny of some of the theoretical and methodological undercurrents of this past research. The authors that collaborated on this exercise represent a fair mix of academics and practitioners. Their interest and personal involvement in the subject is longstanding.

Robert Kappel is professor of Politics and Economics in Africa at the same institute.

The Globalization of Eastern Europe
 Teaching International Relations Without Borders

Globalization and fragmentation, weakly controlled flows of information and knowledge, increasing cleavages in societies undergoing rapid change, flows of migrants, services and capital, bypassing the control of national governments, life styles and consumption patterns produced by electronic media and advertising – all these developments already have a significant impact on post-Soviet regions. And all kind of actors – decision makers, journalists, experts, students – perceive the environment beyond their respective national borders increasingly as the “playground” they have to take into account, and as a framework for action.

The chapters in this volume address various questions on inter- and transnational relations, thereby offering a framework for reflection and for analysis of macro-trends around policy fields relevant for the countries in Central and Eastern Europe.

Rudolph J. Rummel

Statistics of Democide

Genocide and mass murder since 1900

'Statistics of Democide' has two purposes. First, it links all the relevant estimates, sources, and calculations for each of the case studies in Death by Government ('Demozid' – der befohlene Tod. Massenmorde im 20. Jahrhundert), and all additional cases of lesser democide for which data have been collected. The value of this is the listing of each source, its estimate, and comments qualifying the estimate. From these others can check and evaluate Rummel's totals, refine and correct them, and build on this comprehensive set of data. These data are presented and annotated for pre-20th century democide for the megamurderers and for the United States and lesser murderers. All data sources referenced in the democide tables are listed in the references. The methodological underpinnings for this collection have been given in Rummel's previous work, i. e. Death by Government.

Second, having finished collecting all these data and completing the major case studies Rummel finally could systematically test the assumed inverse relationship between democracy and democide. That is the substance of this book. Rummel details the tests and summarizes them.

Conclusion is that the diverse tests are positive and robust, that the less liberal democracy and the more totalitarian a regime, the more likely it will commit democide. The closer to absolute power, the more a regime's disposition to murder one's subjects or foreigners multiplies. As far as this work is concerned, Rummel concludes: "it is empirically true that Power kills, absolute Power kills absolutely."

R. J. Rummel is Professor Emeritus of Political Science, University of Hawaii.

Military and Society in 21st Century Europe

A Comparative Analysis

After the Cold War came to an end, European countries in both East and West faced the common question of how their military organizations and those of their neighbors would respond to shifts in international relations affecting their economies, their perception of globalized threats, and cross-national security management. This volume seeks, by empirically measuring social indicators, to assess the current state of civil-military relations in a number of countries in Eastern Europe (Bulgaria, Czech Republic, Hungary, Romania, Russia) as well as the state of relations in several of their Western European counterparts (France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands). The country studies describe and analyze the differing positions of the military in their specific national settings.

Federalism and Decentralization

Perspectives for the Transformation Process in Eastern and Central Europe
The Marshall Center research project on "Federalism and Decentralization in Eastern and Central Europe" was designed to cooperatively explore ways to promote the decentralization of formerly centralized political structures in Central and East European States, and to present models of federalism that could help introduce or strengthen federal structures in these countries. The various contributions identify the constitutional, legal, cultural, social, and economic preconditions for the successful implementation of federal state structures, particularly in Eastern and Central European states.

Religion and National Identity in the Japanese Context

The subject of Religion and National Identity in the Japanese Context focuses upon the relationship between religion and socio-cultural or socio-political aspects in the history of religions in Japan.

Religious and ideological justifications in the course of forming a political and national identity, and the mutual relation between political, national and cultural issues can be noticed in every region of the world before the onset of secularization processes, but also in modern nation-states today. In Japan as well, just like in most modern societies, political, cultural and religious elements are closely interrelated. In a comparative approach the sixteen papers in this volume elucidate the intellectual undercurrent in Japanese history of putting positive perspectives on national achievements and cultural-religious uniqueness into service of establishing and refurbishing a national identity.

Politics of Indigeneity in the South Pacific

Recent problems of identity in Oceania

This book contributes to a field of growing interest in socio-political and anthropological circles: indigeneity as a form of selfrepresentation and resistance against existing forms of state dominance. Developments in indigenous minorities over recent decades in the interpretation of their own traditional history as a source of self-confidence form the core of the discussion. Revival of tradition, re-tribalization and the loss of confidence in national governments are causing increasing problems. The South Pacific (including Australia) is on the eve of a new era: the 21st Century is opening chances to overcome deep-rooted obstacles and prejudices. At the same time, dangers are emerging in societies where democratic values are often interpreted by indigenous groups as foreign influences which should be replaced by traditional modes of representation. With examples drawn from Australia, New Zealand, Fiji and New Caledonia, the book provides a comprehensive overview of a region in transition.

Everyday Life in Old Botswana

A Photographic Record. With an introduction by John L. Comaroff and Jean Comaroff

"Everyday Life in Old Botswana" presents for the first time selected photographs Prof. Schapera took during his research in the 1930s. Schapera's pictures cover a wide range of daily work such as potmaking, thatching, treshing and cattle herding. Traditional medicine, rainmaking ceremonies and political meetings at the Kgotla are other well illustrated topics. In addition the book includes pictures taken by Rev. Reyneke of the boys' initiation during the same period. Essays on the historical background conclude the edition. The selection of the photographs is supervised by Prof. Schapera. Thus the book stands as an authentic addition to his well established and highly acclaimed work on Botswana.

Why Magna Carta?
 Angevin England revisited

This book suggests that Magna Carta was not simply the product of the evil rule of King John but the culmination of unease with the Angevin government which went back to the reign of Henry II. It analyses the reasons for this unease, the expressions of discontent and the ways which the Angevins dealt with them. Royal opponents who, early on, began looking favourably to the Capetian court are also discussed as are the methods which the Capetian kings of France used to exploit the situation to their best advantage.

Allied Control and German Freedom

American Political and Ideological Influences on the Framing of the West German Basic Law (Grundgesetz)

Although there is a virtual consensus among historians, political scientists, and legal scholars that the West German Basic Law (Grundgesetz) has been one of the great successes of recent European constitutional history, providing many decades of stability and the rule of law, a public myth, in effect ever since 1949, holds that it was a totally indigenous German achievement. The present study is the first book-length attempt to describe and evaluate the specific political and ideological influences, direct and indirect, of the United States on the origins, development, and implementation of the Basic Law.

The Russian Socialist Revolutionary Party Before the First World War

The Socialist Revolutionary Party played an important role in the history of the Russian revolutionary movement. The author seeks to explain why this party—which continued the tradition of the 1870s—did not ultimately prevail in an agrarian country like the Tsarist empire. Using a wealth of printed sources and, for the first time, drawing upon materials from the archive of the Central Committee of the PSR, this study provides a detailed analysis of the theoretical foundations of the party as well as its organisational structure and political practice during the first Russian Revolution. Manfred Hildermeier ist Professor am Seminar für Mittlere und Neuere Geschichte der Universität Göttingen.

“The Transformation of European Politics, 1763–1848”
 Episode or Model in Modern History?

This book takes up a question raised about the nature of the European international system in the late eighteenth-early nineteenth centuries by Paul W. Schroeder's pathbreaking and controversial work, “The Transformation of European Politics, 1763–1848” (1994). Schroeder's central claim was that the European states system underwent a fundamental transformation in the revolutionary, Napoleonic, and Vienna eras from a system of competitive, conflictual power politics based purely on a shifting balance of power to a more consensual, stable, and peaceful set of relations based on legality, acknowledged rights and obligations, and shared norms. The contributors to this volume, while examining this claim, primarily extend the debate to the entire history of European and world international politics from the early seventeenth century to the present.

If this transformation was real, they ask, was it only a temporary episode, or does it represent an example of other transformations or structural changes in international politics over the centuries down to the present day, and a possible model for change in the future?

THE CHURCH'S LITURGY

The Church's Liturgy

Throughout all changes of time and across all cultural differences, the liturgy of the Church is only possible as a response to the service which God has always rendered. The Divine Service is first of all an expression of God's service to the Church, of his work for his own son's many sisters and brothers; only then is the capable of celebrating the liturgy as a response to God's action. The idea of life-creating, even deifying communication, between God and man is the central theme of the book. The first part deals with God's descent towards man, the catabolic dimension of the liturgy as God's invitation to man to enter the divine fullness of life. The second part is concerned with man's acceptance of this invitation, with man's ascent to God, the anabolic dimension of the liturgy. Those two parts from the general liturgiology, the following four parts are dedicated to special liturgical subjects: the celebration of the Eucharist, the sacraments and the benedictions, the liturgy of the Hours and other common services, the ecclesiastical year. The object of this publication, beyond a simple transfer of information, is to arouse and confirm the love of the liturgy, of God's service to the multitude, and the service of the many believers for the greater glory of God.

Michael Kunzler is Professor at Paderborn Theological Faculty and 1999 Visiting professor at Pontifical Lateran University at Rome.

Common Bodies

Everyday Practices, Gender and Religion

The gendered body in its common, everyday activities and references is the central focus of this book. Recognizing the highly abstract and often 'disembodied' character of contemporary discussions on 'the body' in relation to gender, subjectivity and discourse, the authors of this anthology start their inquiries at a more mundane level by studying 'common bodies': human bodies and bodily practices in daily situations of (domestic) work and care, of sex, love and violence, and of prayer and ritual. From this angle of 'corporeal agency' they discuss the meaning of religion, religiosity, transcendence and/or Divinity.

Religious Individualization and Christian Religious Semantics

In the western world, there is a change in religion. Some researchers speak of a general secularisation in the sense of a decline of religion in general. Other researchers claim that religion, represented by the dominant churches in particular, are losing importance. A third group are discovering religious vitality to be an inherent dimension of modernity. The analytical profit might be the greatest if empirical researchers succeed in achieving some sort of balance between functional and substantial dimensions of religion. This is what the authors of this book want to do. It is in this balance that the task of practical theology lies: to reflect on the tension between traditional Christian religion and actual religious practice and to open up perspectives for action in the pastoral practice and teaching.

Imagining God

Empirical Explorations from an international perspective

Is the question of God still relevant for our time? Empirical studies from an international perspective show the fact that there are both indications of God's importance and disappearance. The articles deal with questions related to the content, structure and function of images of God. The studies document the actual variety and forms of religious practice and highlight the issues of God present – out of necessity from an ecumenical and interdisciplinary point of view. If and how the question of God is asked is not only of denominational interest, but is also of a cultural importance for the individual and public life in Europe. The empirical studies in this collection were discussed at the "Würzburg Research Days – Practical Theology" in December 2000. Martha C. Nussbaum: Ethics and Political Philosophy

Lecture and Colloquium in Münster 2000

The philosophical writings of Martha C. Nussbaum, Professor of Law at the University of Chicago, are distinguished by their synthesis of different research areas and by their treatment of current, socially controversial issues. In her ethical and political philosophy, Nussbaum gives detailed readings of works from ancient Greece and Rome, interpreting classical texts with a view to their relevance for contemporary questions. Her "capabilities-approach", developed through her work on Aristotle, has become an established part of political philosophy and of the ethics of the good life. Spurred by her involvement with international organizations, Nussbaum has also employed her philosophical program to confront and investigate ways of solving problems of social justice. In this volume, Nussbaum's work is examined in the context of current philosophical debates, with discussions on other thinking on the relationship of literature and ethics, on feminism, on the politics of international development, and on the idea of cosmopolitanism.

Angela Kallhoff holds a teaching position at the Department of Philosophy at the University of Münster.

Normativity and Legitimacy/Normatività e Legittimazione

Proceedings of the II Meeting Italian-American Philosophy – New York 1999

This volume contains the Proceedings of the Second Meeting Italian-American Philosophy, that took place in New York from 12 to 15 October 1999, together with two contributions given during the First Meeting. It is the first volume of a Yearbook for Philosophical Hermeneutics, The Dialogue, actually aiming to promote the dialogue between analytic and hermeneutic philosophy.

Normativity and legitimacy are the two key concepts which have been at the base of the confrontation between the thought of the Frankfurt School and most of the American philosophy. They can offer the possibility for further discussions and developments within the fields of aesthetics, logic, and language philosophy, epistemology, ethics, philosophy of law and politics. They also represent the ground on which the two different aspects of contemporary philosophy, that one of hermeneutic dealing with historical legitimacy, and the one of analytics dealing with rational determination of norms, could together establish a productive dialogue.

Health and Quality of Life

Philosophical, Medical, and Cultural Aspects

How could one define health and disease? On what presuppositions, and ought we look for such definitions? Does quality of life inherit a subjective or objective evaluation? Are health and quality of life culture dependent concepts? Under the conditions of technologically advanced medicine and the common tendency towards a hedonistic lifestyle such questions come into focus. Hence, one question is of special relevance: which role does health play in our quality of life? The contributions of this interdisciplinary volume aim at the clarification of the various concepts in use.

Advances and Problems in the Philosophy of Technology

The Proceedings of the Karlsruhe Academic Session (1997) of the International Academy of the Philosophy of the Sciences cover the topic of philosophy of technology. Half a dozen of other pertinent topical papers have been added in order to extend the topics dealt with and to reach a rather comprehensive overview of this multi-ramified field. Nowadays philosophy of technology is not only confronted with new, anthropological and social as well as political problems to deal with, but also with methodological problems of the mutual interactions between science and technology, with problems of reliability and viability of technology assessment, e. g. with risks, environmental and social impact assessments. The importance and necessity of a philosophy and a practice-oriented ethics of technology will drastically rise and grow in the near future.

Language – Mobility – Identity

Contemporary Issues for Adult Education in Europe

With the first volume of Bochum Studies in International Adult Education we are launching a new series of publications from the Chair of Adult Education at the Ruhr-University of Bochum.

BSIAE addresses not only researchers, university teachers and students of adult education but also those from related disciplines. While not explicitly addressing practitioners, except for providing them with up-to-date research overviews, each issue will also address politicians and policy makers.

Each volume will be organised around one topic or issue which is of interest, importance or of particular relevance for adult education in general. This particular topic will be considered from various points of view, i. e. comparative, historical, gender, socio-political and cultural.

The first volume of BSIAE intends to look closely at the topics Language – Mobility – Identity and attempts to discuss these issues from the point of view of adult education. The intention of this volume is to create a compilation of different viewpoints and critical analyses on the three topics which together form an overview of their interrelation and their relevance for European development, adult education and adult's learning.

Agnieszka Bron is Professor for Adult Education at the University of Bochum.

German and American Higher Education

Educational Philosophies and Political Systems

In the current debate about educational reform, this volume tries to correct misconceptions about the university systems on both sides of the Atlantic. Leading experts from both countries address basic differences between the egalitarian German and the diversified and hierarchical American system and discuss the following topics: structure and governance of universities: the role of legislatures and governments, boards, university administrations, and faculties; – models of costs and funding, including the question of tuition; – functions, rights and duties of professors and teaching staff; – diversity and minority representation among faculty and students; – student access, expectations and performance; – teaching vs. research, with a glance at the role of research-supporting endowments.

Business Associations in the Common Law World

Written by Anglo-American lawyers with decades of practical experience between them, this book introduces students and practitioners to the economic objectives, legal principles, and practical considerations that characterize the partnerships, corporations, and other business associations who control a major part of the wealth in the “Anglo-sphere” of the United States, United Kingdom, Ireland, and the Commonwealth countries. Having no physical existence as such, these entities are nevertheless treated as legal “persons” by the law. This book brings these businesses in their various forms to life, revealing how they are formed, operated, regulated, taxed, sued, and dissolved.

Interviews with Contemporary English Writers

This book presents a collection of twelve interviews with eminent English contemporary writers held during a period of four years. The book allows an illuminating insight into a very lively and thought-provoking literary culture, stirred not only by recent ideas of postmodernism but also by the manifold issues of nationality, culture, and gender subjected to permanent redefinitions towards the end of the twentieth century. The interviews cover topics such as the relationship between writer and public, the role of the literary tradition, the relevance of contemporary literary theory for the production of literature, images of nationality, intertextuality, changes in the attitude towards language and meaning, and the reception of literary texts by critical reviewers and literary critics.

All the interviewers have worked for the ECCEL (Erlangen Centre for Contemporary English Literature).

Asian American Literature in the International Context

Readings on Fiction, Poetry, and Performance

In their different and yet complementary perspectives, all of the essays in Asian American Literature in the International Context: Readings on Fiction, Poetry, and Performance reiterate the universal lesson of pluralism. They are divided into sections that deal with biraciality and biculturalism, interethnic negotiations, poetic creations, narrative experiments, and (re)constructing self. The wide variety of approaches reflects the contributors’ training in different cultures and across cultures. It showcases refreshing new perspectives in reading that combine the views of literary scholars from three different continents. This collection creates a space for discussion and commentary, of heightened appreciation and increased creativity, a forum that turns the discipline of Asian American Studies into a truly intercultural debate.

The Story of Jazz

Toni Morrison's Dialogic Imagination

Ever since its publication in 1992, Jazz, probably Toni Morrison's most difficult novel to date, has elicited a wide array of critical response. Many of these analyses, while both thoughtful and thought-provoking, have provided only partial or inherently inconclusive interpretations. The title, and certain of the author's own pronouncements, have led other critics to focus on the music itself, both as medium and aesthetic support for the narration.

Justine Tally is Professor of American Studies at the University of La Laguna, Tenerife, Spain, where she specializes in African American literature. She is author of numerous scholarly articles and of Paradise Reconsidered: Toni Morrison's (Hi)stories and Truths (1999).

The recognition that Africans in the Americas have also been subjects of their destiny rather than merely passive objects of European oppression represents one of the major shifts in twentieth-century mainstream historiography. The Civil Rights Movement Revisited

Critical Perspectives on the Struggle for Racial Equality in the United States

The crusade for civil rights was a defining episode of 20th century U.S. history, reshaping the constitutional, political, social, and economic life of the nation. This collection of original essays by both European and American scholars includes close analyses of literature and film, historical studies of significant themes and events from the turn-of-the century to the movement years, and assessments of the movement's legacies. Ultimately, the articles help examine the ways civil rights activism, often grounded in the political work of women, has shaped American consciousness and culture until the outset of the 21st

Passing Novels in the Harlem Renaissance
 An Alternative Concept of African American Identity

This book offers an analysis of the unique and significant contribution of "passing" novels to the literary and intellectual debate of the Harlem Renaissance, especially to the search for a definition of a concept of African American identity. The analysis reveals the presence of a subversive component in these novels, turning them into useful tools to explore the "passing" phenomenon in all its richness and complexity. The present study intends to contribute to the ongoing revision of the parameters conventionally employed to analyze "passing" novels by drawing attention to the enormous significance this subgenre entails for the establishment of a coherent and more inclusive African American literary canon.

The Globalization of Eastern Europe

Teaching International Relations Without Borders
Globalization and fragmentation, weakly controlled flows of information and knowledge, increasing cleavages in societies undergoing rapid change, flows of migrants, services and capital, bypassing the control of national governments, life styles and consumption patterns produced by electronic media and advertising – all these developments already have a significant impact on post-Soviet regions. And all kind of actors – decision makers, journalists, experts, students – perceive the environment beyond their respective national borders increasingly as the “playground” they have to take into account, and as a framework for action.

The chapters in this volume are produced by experts in the so called transformation countries in Eastern Europe. They address various questions on inter- and transnational relations, thereby offering a framework for reflection and for analysis of macro-trends around policy fields relevant for the countries in Central and Eastern Europe. The product certainly mirrors the specific environment of researchers, teachers and students in these countries. At the same time, it reflects a process of intensive discussion on the state of IR literature worldwide. Furthermore, this book demonstrates how useful teaching tools for universities and institutes not only in Eastern and Central Europe can be produced.

Between Sovereignty and Integration

German Foreign Policy and National Identity after 1989
“An excellent piece of work: sophisticated, consistently well-informed, well organized and clearly written. It moves the debate on sovereignty and national identity into a distinctly different key than that defined by such outstanding authors as David Campbell: the context provided by significant historiographical conflicts over the meaning and direction of foreign policy. That this is done for the German case, rather than the by now all too familiar American one, also shifts the debate away from current ground.” (John Agnew, Professor of Geography, University of California, Los Angeles)

Federalism and Decentralization

Perspectives for the Transformation Process in Eastern and Central Europe

The Marshall Center research project on “Federalism and Decentralization in Eastern and Central Europe” was designed to cooperatively explore ways to promote the decentralization of formerly centralized political structures in Central and East European States, and to present models of federalism that could help introduce or strengthen federal structures in these countries. It was developed by the research department of the Marshall Center in cooperation with two reputable institutes, the European Center for Research on Federalism at the University of Tübingen and the German Institute for Research on Federalism at the University of Hannover.

The key mission of the George C. Marshall European Center for Security Studies, “to forge democracy through understanding and trust,” was promoted through this research effort by bringing together more than twenty authors from North America, Western and Eastern Europe for cooperative research work. Copublished with Palgrave, New York vol. 2, 2001, 384 pp., 45,90 €, hc., ISBN 3-8258-5156-7

Germany's Africa Policy Revisited

Interests, images and incrementalism

Although Germany has been a major international player in Africa ever since its readmission to international politics after 1955, surprisingly little has been written about this topic – and even less reliable knowledge has been established. “Germany's Africa policy revisited” firstly poses the need for a review of Germany's relations with the African continent over the past decades. Secondly it presents a challenge to fill in some of the factual gaps which characterize the state of research so far. Thirdly, it calls for scrutiny of some of the theoretical and methodological undercurrents of this past research. The authors that collaborated on this exercise represent a fair mix of academics and practitioners. Their interest and personal involvement in the subject is longstanding. Sovereignty, Legitimacy, and Power in West African Societies

Perspectives from Legal Anthropology

Africa has been given persistently the negative image of the lost continent: political turmoil, economic failures, hunger, disease, irresponsible and irrational warlords and corrupt regimes.

Such a bias calls for a critique. The authors seek to analyse power divisions and struggles over sovereignty and legitimacy in African societies from a historical point of view. Possibilities for peaceful social relations are taken as much into account as internal frictions between state and “traditional authorities”. In a striking difference to the legitimacy claims of single-rooted states, political legitimacy in many African states derives from two sources: the imposed European colonial states and the pre-colonial African polities. State and traditional authorities (systems of chieftaincy) depend on each other's contributions in striving towards the goals they both desire to achieve in the fields of development, stable democratic governance and human rights. "Indigenous" institutions are not necessarily inferior to state institutions. The opposite might be true in view of the capacity of the traditional institutions not just to decide internal disputes, but actually to solve them and thus contribute to social cohesion. Such a perspective is highly relevant for a variety of concrete social relations of which gender relations are one important aspect.

Towards Negotiated Co-management of Natural Resources in Africa

Within the field of management of natural resources, this book focuses on the various approaches of policy formulation and implementation. The question central to this book is how to co-operate with people, the various categories of residents as well as non-residents, in the rural areas: in a top-down, a participatory or a contractual (co-management) way. On the basis of a comparative analysis of 12 case studies in the book, these three approaches are thoroughly discussed and their internal and external constraints examined.

The book starts with an editorial chapter, discussing the recent administrative and political developments in Africa as well as the new opportunities, which they offer for policies in the field of environment, and development. The question is brought up whether the recent processes of decentralization, democratization, and empowerment of local organizations have indeed created new opportunities or that they have only superficially changed the political culture of the countries concerned. In the concluding chapter of the book, the approaches are contrasted to each other as logical models, each with its own potentiality and limitations. Conclusions are formulated why the top down approach must result in improvisation to escape from failure, and why the participatory approach risks to end up into a mixed balance. Special attention is given to the conditions and the prospects for the contractual or co-management approach, which has been introduced into Africa only recently. Under certain conditions, this approach seems rather promising.

The Kurdish Conflict in Turkey

Obstacles and Chances for Peace and Democracy

The kidnapping and condemnation of the PKK Leader Abdullah Ocalan represent a turning point in the development of the Kurdish problem in the Middle East. Although the Turkish state achieved a strategic victory, the Kurdish conflict is yet to be politically solved. The question whether the Turkish state elite will be willing in this new context to change its repressive policy against the Kurds and assume a new political orientation remains open.

Overseas Chinese Entrepreneurship and Capitalist Development in Southeast Asia

The study aims at finding an explanation to the economic development of Southeast Asia. To achieve this end, Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand and the Philippines have been chosen as the foci of the study.

To explain the region's recent success, the study is guided by the hypothesis that overseas Chinese entrepreneurship, exercised by a group belonging to a discriminated ethnic minority, is an indispensable component of the capitalist development of Southeast Asia. Overseas Chinese businesses dominate nearly all branches of the economy of their respective countries of residence. On a regional scale, they are acknowledged to control two-thirds of the region's retail trade. The hypothesis of the study is validated by the empirical findings. Furthermore, the study has arrived at the conclusion that Southeast Asia is host to a type of entrepreneurship – Overseas Chinese entrepreneurship – that evolved and developed throughout the centuries and proven for its resiliency and risk-taking abilities. It did not create the boom in the region, however. Liberal government policies, the inflow of huge foreign capital, and the availability of cheap and skilled labor among the indigenous population are among the more crucial factors that facilitated this transformation.

Transformation and Arms Conversion in the Baltic Sea Region and in Russia

One of the central problems of the socio-economic transformation in Central and Eastern Europe is the regional concentration of the arms industry. Yet, to make use of its technological and economic potential it is necessary to begin a process of conversion from military to civil production.

The authors of this book show that arms conversion is a multi-dimensional problem. Conversion is seen as a significant part of the transformation process.

The first section of the book discusses both macro-structures and micro-conditions of arms conversion. The second section presents research results from Central and Eastern European countries and various industrial branches. Concluding articles on first hand experience and non-governmental interests involved make the book a fundamental reader on arms conversion.

Advice not welcomed

Recommendations of the OSCE High Commissioner to Estonia and Latvia and the response

The first OSCE High Commissioner on National Minorities, Max van der Stoep, is widely recognised as one of the architects of peace and stability in the Baltic region. However, his involvement into the interethnic reconciliation in Estonia and Latvia was formally limited to the recommendations made to the respective governments. The book contains an overview of the High Commissioner's urgent advice, an analysis of the appropriate changes in domestic legislation from 1993 to 2000, and finally the practical effects of the recommendations. The book contributes to more realistic and balanced studies of the role and potential of influential international organisations.

International Restructuring and Conversion of the Arms Industries and the Military Sector

Industrial, Regional and Sociocultural Aspects. Proceedings of the International Conversion Conference, Bremen, April 2001
The decade of the nineties saw a rapidly changing political world, a sudden and severe change of political conditions for the state-dependent industries, sectors and regions and, consequently, increased research on and resuming of this unique experience. The present volume, therefore, represents settled experience, sector analyses, spatial and company case studies and perspectives for proactive change management in the coming decade. The conference brought to the fore not only recent alternative views from European and U.S. perspectives but also a clear message for all relevant agents to openly face and proactively address the structural challenges in the field in this decade. There is no justification for a reluctant or reactive approach to the issues of peace, disarmament and corresponding industrial and regional restructuring. The present volume is a major source for an ongoing debate on the political and economic issues of peace, (dis-)armament, and related structural change in "21".

Donor Coordination of Economic Assistance to Eastern Europe

Mechanisms and Origins of Sectoral Governance in International Relations. With a preface by Hartmut Elsenhans. A major restriction to Western aid efforts has been a lack of coordination. The study on hand explores into the determinants of successful cooperation between bi- and multilateral donor agencies at the example of Western aid to Eastern Europe in the period from 1990 to 1996. In raising the assumption that networking between international organizations cannot be stimulated by appealing to norm-oriented behavior but is contingent upon the existence of common interests, the idealist view of international relations is seriously challenged. Comparing different assistance sectors – energy, telecoms, mass privatization, agriculture, statistics, central banking, environment and education – it is shown that donor coordination is a form of collective action initiated by donors in response to sectoral market failure which is perceived as significant because it threatens the non-attainment of basic goals or inflicts own projects with high costs or risks.

Traditional Leadership and Democratisation in Southern Africa

A Comparative Study of Botswana, Namibia, and Southern Africa

What are the impacts of ethnically based, traditional political institutions on democratic state and nation building in Southern Africa and how do heterogeneous sources of legitimacy affect the prospects of long term democratic regime consolidation? What are the impacts of "traditionalism" employed for purposes of party-political mobilisation? An indicator for the political influence of traditional leadership in Southern Africa is the fact, that a considerable number of democratically elected politicians in high office originate from aristocratic families, representing hereditary traditional leadership structures for centuries. This is evident for the charismatic founding President of the New South Africa, Nelson Mandela, as well as for his adversary, the Prime Minister-in-office, Mangosuthu Buthelezi. The careful reconsideration of this "state behind the state" has been identified as crucial in this study to make any realistic assessments of the prospects for sustainable democratisation in Southern African countries in the near future.

Democracies and War

An Investigation of Theoretical Explanations

That democracies do not wage war against each other is now a well-documented pattern of international politics. However, our theoretical knowledge of this called democratic peace is limited. We do not know what is so special about democracies that impedes them from fighting fellow democracies, even though they fight wars against (perceived) non-democracies. This volume contributes to the debate by way of classifying and synthesizing different theoretical accounts of democratic peace at the analytical level of the state and the international system. It digs deep into the workings of the democratic political system and the orientations of its foreign policy-leaders that culminate in collective action on the international arena. A central theme is that processes of integration - taking place both within as well as among democracies - lead to the formation of a common identity: Democracies "construct" their "friends" and "foes", basing their judgment on the way other states resolve their domestic conflicts. This argument is supported by a discussion of conceptual, methodological and epistemological problems of democratic peace. The volume concludes with a presentation of policy-recommendations and a short summary in German.

Towards the Control of Oil Resources in the Caspian Region

This book provides an introduction to the current struggle for control of the energy reserves in the Caspian region (Russia, Iran, Turkmenistan, Kazakhstan and Azerbaijan). An intense competition has arisen between the following various actors for control of these energy reserves: the advanced industrialised countries (especially the United States, and Europe) and their backed Transnational Corporations on the one hand, and the main regional powers (Russia, Turkey, Iran, and also China and Pakistan) on the other. This struggle is a characteristic of the post-Cold War competition for the control and security of the most needed natural resources, oil and gas, which are concentrated in only a few regions in the world. This makes the Caspian region to one of the most important geo-political areas in the post-Cold War era. The question of the routes for exporting oil and gas from this land-locked area is central to the export of the Caspian energy resources. It evolves around various conflicts between the different forces involved in the Central Asian and the Caucasian regions.

Statistics of Democide

Genocide and mass murder since 1900

"Professor Rummel and some of his colleagues engaged in what we today know as the theory of the Democratic Peace. For, in my view, this important work has produced a paradigm shift in serious academic thinking about the true causes of international conflict. Professor Rummel's nomination in 1996 for the Nobel Peace Prize was a logical consequence of his tremendous contributions in this field. ... Statistics of Democide: Genocide and Mass Murder Since 1900, constitutes the most comprehensive collection of scholarly data on democide currently available, and provides the detailed statistical foundation upon which Professor Rummel's other works have been based. With this volume, scholars will be able not only to examine Professor Rummel's remarkable conclusions in greater detail, but also to build upon Professor Rummel's work and ultimately contribute even further to our understanding of these issues." Hatred and the construction of identity

The book addresses key concepts of modern anthropology like "difference" and "identity" in the light of ethnographic evidence from various local settings stretching from Morocco to Indonesia. As the antagonistic and destructive aspects of social identification are also discussed, the book is a contribution to conflict theory, it provides elements of orientation in a world marked by a proliferation of ethnic movements and of nationalisms which become more narrow and more aggressive.

Southeast Asian Urbanism

The Meaning and Power of Social Space

Southeast Asian Urbanism is based on the results of over two decades of field research on cities and towns of Thailand, Sri Lanka, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Singapore. The connections between micro and macro processes, between grassroots interactions and urban structures, between social theory and empirical data are analysed to provide a vivid picture of the great variety of urban forms, the social creativity in the slums of Bangkok, Manila or Jakarta, the variety of cultural symbolism and the political and religious structuration of urban space.

The book is written in the tradition of German or European sociological research from Marx and Weber to Habermas and Bourdieu. The work on Southeast Asian urbanism was carried out within the research programme of the Sociology of Development Research Centre of the University of Bielefeld in Germany, but also during teaching and research assignments at Chulalongkorn University, the National University of Singapore, the Science University of Malaysia, the National University of Malaysia, Andalas University, Padang, the Population Studies Centre at Gadjah Mada University, the University of Indonesia, the University of the Philippines and the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, Singapore.

The book will be of interest to urban anthropologists, political scientists and sociologists, to students of Southeast Asian history, culture and society, to urban planners and policy makers.

Lombard Houses in St. Petersburg

Pawning as a Survival Strategy of Low-Income Households? The book is an outcome of a research project on pawnshops in Saint Petersburg, which took place in 1999/2000 in cooperation with the Center of Independent Social Research. It relates to the function of pawnshops in the life strategies of low-income households. The research investigated different topics with various methods: a reconstruction of the history of Russian pawnshops based on secondary materials and government reports; a description of the current pawnshop landscape in Saint Petersburg based upon secondary material and own information; a questionnaire of 100 pawnshop customers focusing on demographic data of the respondents and their households, the living conditions, the income situation, the importance of pawnshops in their life strategies, the use of credit, alternative sources of credit, defaults, and the like; five pre-structured deep interviews of pawnshop customers who already had lombard experience in Soviet times to work out differences and similarities, as well as the psychological component of pawning; open pre-structured interviews with pawnshop directors on their companies' business, their target group and the pawnshop market; and finally a profile of one successful private firm in the market and the biography of its chairman. In addition to an institutional analysis the book aims at a description of the milieu of pawnshop customers, which is shaped by an ongoing crisis of the Russian economy and society.

Food Security and Nutrition

The Global Challenge

The persistence of an unacceptably high level of hunger and malnutrition worldwide presents a serious challenge to the world on the threshold of the third millennium. Although enough food is produced to feed mankind, about 840 million people go hungry; among them are 185 million pre-school children that are severely underweight for their age. Since an additional 80 million people have to be fed each year, achieving food security is a central global challenge, if not the most important development issue.

The aim of the reader is to analyze actual problems in the field of food security and nutrition and to discuss present and future strategies to overcome hunger. Food security is a complex subject. In order to master this complexity, we distinguish between four dimensions of analyses: Theoretical-analytical, empirical-descriptive, normative-political, institutional.

Maria-Theresien-Thaler

Edited with an introduction by Werner Biermann

The following account by Carl Peez and Dr. Josef Raudnitz, two high-ranking Austrian officials, portrays the 'biography' of a money that accompanied the apogee of commerce particularly in East Africa. Both authors served in the Austrian-Habsburg civil service where they held senior posts with the consular service and the fiscal administration, respectively. Writing in the '90s of the 19th century, they – understandably – deplored the empire's economic decay. The story of the Maria Theresa Taler, therefore, should also inform on former glory and missed opportunities. Whatever fascinating this account is, it seems appropriate to restrict the presentation to eastern Africa in particular.

Muslim Traditions and Modern Techniques of Power

This volume deals with historical and contemporary articulations of the relation of tension between the civilizing impetus of Muslim traditions, and modern forms, fields and techniques of power. These techniques are associated with the process of state-building, as well as with the related constraints of disciplining, normative cohesion, control of the territory and monitored social differentiation. The contributions conceptualize Muslim traditions as deriving their legitimacy, authority, as well as normative and organizing power from being embedded in the discourses and institutions of Islam, which constitute one major center within world history, by now also encompassing Muslim communities within Western societies.

Africa's Reintegration into the World Economy

The marginalisation of Africa with regard to international trade, international investment, international technology flows and international firm cooperation is the outcome of historical factors, especially of the colonial period, but also of the policies pursued after independence. Africa's marginalisation is also the result of highly inadequate economic reforms during the 1980s that failed to stimulate internationally competitive production of goods and services in primary production, in manufacturing and in services.

Volume 8 of the African Development Perspectives Yearbook focusses on the causes of Africa's inadequate integration into the world economy, and on the strategies to regain an international status for Africa's production and trade sectors. Cases of successful integration of companies and countries into the world market as well as lessons for a better integration are the main thrust of the book. It is now time to demonstrate that world market integration is in reach for African producers, especially when considering the rich history of trading within Africa and between Africa and other world economic regions.

Content: Africa and Globalisation; Policies to Reintegrate Africa into the World Economy; Country Cases of Africa responding to Globalisation Trends; Globalisation and Gender in Africa; Regional Development and Globalisation; News and Booknotes.

China's Financial Sector Reform in the Transition to a Market Economy

Key issues and policy options

The book is a problem-oriented study of China's financial sector in the transitional process since 1979. It provides deep and precise insights into the characteristics and problems of China's financial sector with respect to investment finance, the central banking and commercial banking systems, the financial market, and the legal and institutional framework of bank supervision in China. More importantly, the book has also proposed workable strategies for resolving two acute problems: interest rate liberalization and solving the issue of non-performing loans in China's banking system. The recent financial crisis in Asia is also a subject of the book, especially as regards its effects on the banking sector, stock markets, and external financial market liberalization in China. Furthermore, a projection is made about the trends in Chinese economic policies, particularly the interest rate policy, the exchange rate policy, and the fiscal policy, and about the perspectives of China's financial sector reform.

This book is a valuable reference for academic researchers, investors, business managers, and policy-makers who are concerned with China's banking and financial system.

Schumpeter and the Dynamics of Asian Development

This book is the result of a cooperation between Aichi University in Toyohashi, Japan and Bremen University, Germany. Research groups of the two universities were responsible for the scientific preparation of a conference, which took place in Bremen in September 2-4, 1998. The research groups then went on redrafting the contributions and preparing for the production of the book. It highlights impressively the work of the research groups on issues of dynamic development and crisis in Asia, relating therein dynamic growth and the crisis in Asia to the theories of J. Schumpeter.

The European Integration Process

A Historical and Comparative Institutional Analysis
European Integration is analysed in a historical and in a comparative perspective by applying New Institutional Economics. European Integration is shaped by rules being triggered for further Integration and simultaneously giving integration direction. The analysis starts with the European Coal and Steel Community and ends with the European Union. The functions of rules explain institutionalisation as well as non-institutionalisation of Europe. The influence of these functions varies from country to country and from integration step to integration step. Additionally, these functions can be interrelated in different ways.

Expanding NAFTA

Economic Effects on Chile of Free Trade with the United States

The world economy has witnessed a sudden increase in free trade agreements, generating a renewed debate on their economic impact. In Expanding NAFTA, Carmen Zechner focuses on the economic effects on Chile of the potential free trade agreement with the United States. The author creates a framework for analyzing the impact of economic integration between a developed and a developing country from the developing country's perspective. This book goes beyond earlier analyses of the static gains from free trade to examine the dynamic and more intangible effects that are critical to the welfare evaluation of trade agreements. Expanding NAFTA is an important contribution to the research on preferential trade liberalization and to understanding developing countries' trade policy choices. This book will be indispensable to anyone interested in trade policy making and the Chilean economy.

E-Commerce: A Platform for Integrated Marketing

Case Study on U.S. Retailing

According to market forecasts, e-commerce will attain growing importance in the near future: Business transactions are changing. However, until today, the subject lacks profound findings about possible challenges and advantages, as well as about success factors of acceptance. The present book informs about the trends in business-to-consumer e-commerce both from the retailer's and the customer's point of view. Additionally, it contains a case study of a well known U.S. retailer and a corresponding customer survey. Based on the results of this study, customer profiles, market segments and strategies are derived. The study shows that e-commerce is far more than a mere selling and distributing channel. It is a platform for an integrated marketing that takes customers' needs into consideration while at the same time enforces customer focus.

While it may be too early to predict its ultimate impacts, e-commerce is certainly a major source of business opportunity today. The greatest threat may be the risk of not acting on this occasion.

Everyday Life in Old Botswana

A Photographic Record. With an introduction by John L.

Comaroff and Jean Comaroff

"Everyday Life in Old Botswana" presents for the first time selected photographs Prof. Schapera took during his research in the 1930s. Schapera's pictures cover a wide range of daily work such as pot-making, thatching, treshing and cattle herding. Traditional medicine, rainmaking ceremonies and political meetings at the Kgotla are other well illustrated topics. In addition the book includes pictures taken by Rev. Reyneke of the boys' initiation during the same period. Essays on the historical background conclude the edition. The selection of the photographs is supervised by Prof. Schapera. Thus the book stands as an authentic addition to his well established and highly acclaimed work on Botswana.

A joint publication with the Botswana Society, the National Museum, Monuments and Art Gallery, Botswana, and the Royal Anthropological Institute (London).

Law As Process

An Anthropological Approach (1978). New introduction by Professor Martin Chanock of La Trobe University, Australia This study of the role of law in society has become a standard work in the ethnology of law. The central theme of the book is that the same social processes which prevent the total regulation of society also reshape and transform efforts at partial regulation. In particular, the making of rules and social and symbolic order is as often matched by situational pressures to manipulate, circumvent, remake or replace the same, as it is to uphold them.

Using both pre-industrial and modern settings, Professor Moore examines the basic tension between the idea that law constitutes a conscious and rational attempt to direct society and most thought in the social sciences, that there are underlying causes of social behaviour which are not fully in the conscious control of the actors. Over a period of time regulatory control can be only temporary, incomplete and its consequences not fully predictable. The study of regulation is, therefore, one of partial orders and partial controls in the specific social contexts. "All should welcome it as a stimulating contribution that will help keep the ethnology of law a lively subject." MAN

The Trading States of the Oil Rivers

A Study of Political Development in Eastern Nigeria (1963). New introduction by John C. McCall, Dept of Anthropology at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale, ILL.

This vivid account of the rise of the remarkable slave and palm oil trading states in the Niger delta in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries also analyses the relation of political development to economic change. The author's field studies among the Ijo, Ibibio, and Ibo peoples have made possible an analysis of the essential processes of economic and political transformation which lay behind the oral traditions. There are also detailed and often lively accounts of the European traders.

Aidan W. Southall

Alur Society

A Study in Processes and Types of Domination (1956). New introduction by Professor Davin Parkin, Head of the Institute of Social Anthropology, Oxford University

Alur Society became a classic for a number of reasons. Being much more than a descriptive account of an African society, it was the first intensive ethnography to adopt the ideas of Max Weber. It pioneered the idea that religion and ritual could be the basis of political action. It also showed how state systems could evolve not just on the basis of conquest but as a result of societies without kings inviting those with kings to govern them. Southall's theory of the segmentary state was adopted by political anthropologists throughout the subject and also by political scientists, being applied not just to Africa but also to India and other parts of the world. The book was able to arrive at such long-lasting and imaginative conclusions through the use of ethnographic material of a quality rarely surpassed. It is moreover arguably the best book in social anthropology of a Nilotic-speaking people. Southall's own command of their language and his overall scholarly knowledge of Nilotes is also unsurpassed.

Effa Okupa

International Bibliography of African Customary Law
Ius non scriptum

This book makes life unusually easy for anyone who wants to know about African indigenous laws, and seeks to encourage further research into the laws that regulate the lives of millions of Africans. For, in spite of colonialism, military decrees and the authoritative modernity of state civil or common law, African indigenous laws have not fallen into abeyance.

African indigenous laws, like Roman law before Justinian codification, was mos maiorum, the path of the ancestors. Accordingly, Roman law, English common law and African indigenous law are the great legal creation of pagan human beings whereas other ancient systems of laws such as Judaism, Sharia, Hindu, Adat laws, were religious in origin. The Bibliography ranges widely over topics as diverse as cultural property, coups d'état and the plunder of antiquities, to formalities of marriage, child betrothal, divorce, sororate marriage, levirate marriage, to succession and inheritance, oral will, and administration of the estate. 'Those of us with a common interest in possible new strategies for successful management of heterosexual relationship and reproduction will find Dr. Okupa's book full of possible alternatives. Though, as Dr. Okupa says, minds like parachutes should be open; there are other ways of doing this and in defiance of persecution and prejudice, they work.'

Dr Germaine Greer, University of Cambridge
'This unusual bibliography crosses boundaries of countries and disciplines. It will be an invaluable aid to many different lines of research.'

A Dictionary of Ila Usage

1860–1960

The book is based on material collected by missionaries at Kasenga Mission in Zambia. Edwin Smith began in 1901 to note each new Ila word, together with illustrative sentences dictated by his Ila informants. Later missionaries continued this practice, so that in 1959 the author found a mass of over 12,000 items already collected.

As the largest body of Ila ever assembled, the dictionary offers much of interest in several fields. The language has a consistent agglutinative structure of great sophistication, logical as Latin, flexible as Greek. The speakers reveal not merely the preoccupations of daily existence in Ila villages a century ago, but an outlook both sensitive and wryly humorous.

Appendices list nearly 2,000 synonyms, 276 proverbs, 164 metaphors, 216 customs, 400 trees with their medicinal uses, 290 plants, 150 birds, and grammatical tables.

'Without the dedication of Mr Fowler, none of the precious early notes on which this work is based would have seen the light of day. This work is outstanding in the way it brings together and adds value to the work of many contributors – and always identifies its sources. The work of Kayobe Syamatanga and his colleague at the beginning of this century would have had little value without the later annotations, and Mr Fowler has clearly harnessed the enthusiasm of his collaborator Pearson Likukela to great effect. In between, he has captured and preserved the contributions of a series of observers with diverse interest and a close sympathy for the culture.'

Hausa Urban Art and Its Social Background

External House Decorations in a Northern Nigerian City

'When I started my investigation of decorated houses in the walled city of Zaria in late 1976, it was above all to record the rapidly disappearing external wall decorations. Hence, the survey was perceived as a rescue operation to collect as many photographs and drawings as possible before these decorations disappeared altogether, and also to record vital information about them from compound heads living in decorated houses, and from the master craftsmen who created them.

During an introductory stock-taking survey we listed nearly one thousand decorated houses. When I concluded the survey in 1985 the material collected included 75 recorded life stories of craftsmen. When I finally completed the manuscript of this book hardly any of the old traditional external wall decorations had survived. It was obvious that traditional wall decoration had become a thing of the past, no longer relevant to the younger generation of compound heads in the city of Zaria, and indeed in most other traditional towns in northern Nigeria.'

The Ila Speaking

Records of a lost world

'The Ila Speaking' is a record of life in a Central African village around a century ago. It originated in conversations recorded by Methodist missionaries as they attempted to learn the language and customs of the Ila people. Over the years 1906 to 1966 they collected over 12000 items. What began as a vocabulary with examples ended as the self-portrait of a people and a way of life.

The author worked with the Ila from 1958 to 1966, later producing a "Dictionary of Ila Usage" (LIT Verlag 2000). The present book is a series of extracts from the dictionary arranged by subject, with a commentary. It is the author's hope that 'the voices come over loud and clear to you the reader, and that you come away from this book with a feel for Ila humour, Ila life, and Ila reflections on people and their ways. I did, and I am sure you will too' (Professor Graham Furniss, School of Oriental and African Studies – London).

On the Move

Mobility, Land Use and Livelihood Practices on the Central Plateau in Burkina Faso

This book analyses the complex interplay between livelihood practices in northern Burkina Faso and diverse processes of geographic mobility, among which massive migration by Moose to the south and west of the country and to the Ivory Coast. Supported by extensive ethnographic data it is demonstrated how the flexibility of land tenure arrangements allows for and is fuelled by actors geographic mobility, how the meaning of migration and the way it is embedded in social organization changed over the last century, and how differential accumulation of cattle by migrants strains relations among Moose farmers and complicates the latter relations with Fulbe herders.

“Money is the True Friend”

Economic Practice, Morality and Trust among the Iganga Maize Traders in Uganda

The Ugandan economy was once solidly based on the export of cash crops such as coffee and cotton. The economic crisis and the civil war in the 1970s and 1980s however profoundly changed the agricultural economy, and marketing of traditional cash crops was replaced by marketing of commercialized food crops. “Money is the true friend” deals with the emergence of de-regulated food markets for maize in Eastern Uganda. The focus is not marketing as such, but rather a new social and economic field for local traders demarcated by the involvement in three maize markets: the relief market, the Kenyan market and the domestic market. The central problem illuminated in the book is the relationship between the liberalization of food marketing and the development of a new social and cultural practice – a morality – for trading which is both shaped by and shapes the marketing opportunities for the participating traders.

Oral Tradition Narratives of the Emai People

This collection of seventy prose of narrative samples represents the only published record of the oral tradition of the Emai people of southern Nigeria. The narratives are presented in both Emai orthography and English translation. They tend to portray everyday cultural practices of the Emai with human characters or their animal personification. As such, they provide an initial glimpse of Emai cosmology, cultural values and social norms as well as a firm impression of how Emai grammatical resources function in spontaneous narrative discourse.

Peasants and the Ethiopian State

Agricultural Producers’ Cooperatives and their Reflections in Amharic Oral Poetry. A Case Study in Yetnora, East Gojjam, 1975- 1991

Composing, reciting and improvising poetry is a common practice in the Ethiopian countryside where an Amharic-based political communication culture provides a sophisticated medium for expressing intricate ideas. Among the most interesting features of the Amharic language, which is known for its poetic encoding of dissent, is its ambiguity. The passion for speculative allusions and double-talk can be seen as a central characteristic of the Ethiopian peasant-culture which plays with innuendo and hidden meanings, without transgressing the boundaries of formal norms for polite communication. An investigation of Ethiopia’s recent agrarian reforms as reflected in Amharic oral poetry represents an innovative approach which has yielded fascinating insights. Taking Yetnora Agricultural Producers’ Cooperative as an example, Getie Gelaye provides a most informed and convincing account of peasant attitudes as reflected in oral poetry.

Jan Jansen

The Griot’s Craft

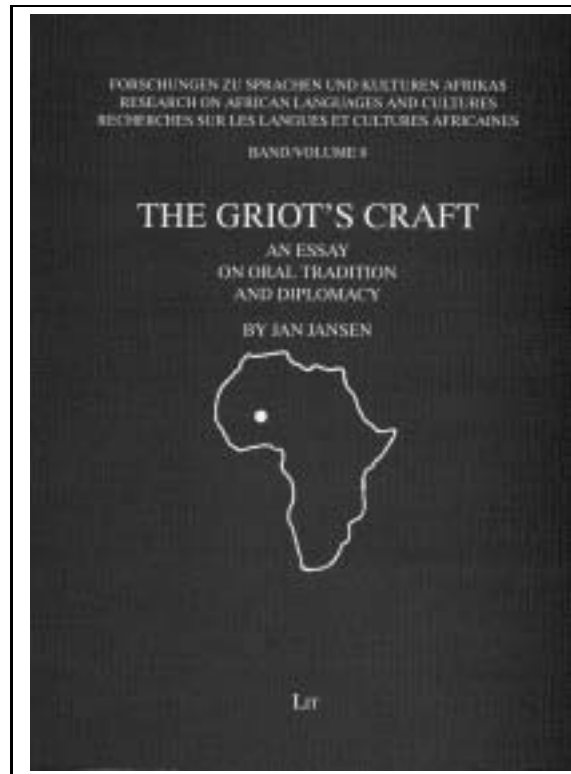

An Essay on Oral Tradition and Diplomacy

Griots, the West African traditional bards, have attracted scholarly attention for decades because of their apparently infinite knowledge of history and their positions as social mediators. Academic research has thus focused on their verbal skills, their memory, their music and the meaning of their texts. Their diplomatic skills as mediators, however, have never been the object of systematic analysis. This book aims to fill that lacuna by examining how griots deal with both social relationships and the transfer of knowledge, thus illustrating why griots play such an important role in Mande societies. Griots are more than mere ‘storytellers’ or ‘entertainers’. The subtle art of diplomatic mediation is integral to their craft. Jan Jansen elaborates his ideas on the basis of observations made during two years of research conducted among the prestigious bards of Kela (Mali). By using an interactionist approach, he demonstrates how griots create – both physically and metaphorically – a space to work in, and how they shape social relations – for which the creation of alleged historical texts is a prerequisite – through which conflicts are communicated and subsequently resolved.

“Jansen is the first scholar to provide us with extensive insight into ‘jelikan’ (griot speech) as social practice and function. Jansen’s arguments attack many long-accepted views of Mande oral tradition and will undoubtedly raise controversy, but they are soundly based on extensive and sensitive fieldwork.” (Ralph A. Austen, Professor of African History, University of Chicago)

Amharic Oral Poems of the Peasantry in East Gojjam

Text, Classification, Translation and Commentary

This book deals with the poetic traditions and performance of the peasants of East Gojjam in Northwest Ethiopia and presents the major genres of Amharic oral poetry in original and translation and commentary in English. The study provides fieldwork strategies, methodological issues and a critical review of the contributions of European and Ethiopian scholars to the study of Amharic oral poetry. It also describes major performance occasions such as agricultural work parties, religious festivals, weddings, funeral ceremonies, cattle herding and local public gatherings where Amharic poems and songs are composed, recited, sung and improvised. The study presents a total of 260 Amharic poems and songs classified under ten major categories: war songs, heroic recitals, grievance poems, cattle herders’ and children’s songs, wedding songs, work songs, religious songs, funeral poems, praise poems of the patriots, and contemporary and historical poems. Explanations and commentaries are also provided on local and cultural expressions based on the social, cultural, religious, historical and communicative contexts of the rural people and the interviews and discussions conducted with selected informants and singers.

The Games of Gods and Man

Essays in Play and Performance

The problems of games and play, a basic ontological category of thought and action, have long occupied culture historians like Huizinga and Caillois as well as mainstream modern philosophers from Heidegger to Gadamer. The present volume traces the concept of the ludic in its generative as well as in its violent and destructive potential, and relates the traditional concepts developed in particular by Romantic aesthetics in drama and poetry to those developed in modern times in literary genres by Bakhtin with the emphasis on the tropes of the performing body. In the present collection of essays, the great variety of theoretical frameworks is grounded in and connected to empirical data on ritual processes and mythic structures across a wide spectrum of ethnographic evidence. The collected essays connect notions of the ludic as framed performance (proposed by Bateson and Goffman) with the ludic as “free play” with the potential to possess the player, crossing disciplinary boundaries and discourses from theatre-studies to anthropology. Forms of ritual processes, of mythic games and of cultural reflexivity, together with intriguing and universal tropes of myth and literature such as the figures of the trickster and the fool, are treated in cross-cultural perspectives. These include Indian, Greek and Germanic mythologies, Indian ritual dance and prophetic theatre plays in Ancient Israel, Bushmen syncretic religious services, the diverse forms of self-reflexive play among Brazilian Kayapo Indians, and the plays and games among the inmates of concentration camps. The volume should appeal to students of anthropology, of theatre and cultural studies, as well as to culture historians and philosophers concerned with the interface between ritual and play, or player and audience, and the larger issue of the rules of games and the freedom of the hermeneutic interpretation of text through performances.

Adolf Bastian and the Psychic Unity of Mankind

The Foundations of Anthropology in Nineteenth Century Germany

Adolf Bastian mapped a programme for anthropological research in the nineteenth century which is still accepted in the international scholarly community today, without the figure of its founder being known. This is the first time that seminal pieces of the work of this much-neglected scholar have been translated into English. Bastian had an impact, directly and indirectly, on geography, psychology, comparative religious studies, and ethnology in the twentieth century. The translation is preceded by a scholarly introduction, exploring the complexities of nineteenth century developments in the sciences and humanities in Germany, and tracing the rise of anthropological thinking within this framework. The foundations of ethnology and ethnography on the European Continent are extensively discussed in the light of predecessors, as well as the emergence of diverse schools of the social sciences up to an including structuralism, with the focus on Bastian.

Islamic History and Culture in Southern Ethiopia

Collected Essays

Studies on Islam in Ethiopia have long been neglected although Islam is the religious confession of almost half of the Ethiopian population. The essays focus on the following topics:

Islamic principalities in Southeast Ethiopia between the 13th and the 16th Centuries;

Medieval Muslim Survival as a Stimulating Factor in the Re-Islamization of Southeastern Ethiopia;

The Sanctuary of Shaykh Husayn and the Oromo-Somali Connections in Bale;

Notes on the Islamization and the Muslim Shrines of the Härär Plateau;

The Islamization of the Arsi-Oromo.

The essays are based on the study of written records and on field research in southern parts of the country carried out during the first half of the 1970s.

The Long Road to Peace

Constructive Conflict Transformation in South Africa
Political dominance of the white minority in South Africa has been abolished since the early nineties. But the road leading to a more just society with equal chances for all, confronted with still existing racism and harsh differences between rich and poor, still will be a long one. Within the poles of societal transformation numerous conflicts occur which can only be addressed in a comprehensive and long term peace process. Denis Dressel and Jochen Neumann, sponsored by ASA programme in 1997 for a three months field study term in South Africa, explain in this book actual meaning and relevance of the conflict topic and the different methods of conflict transformation, developed in South Africa by many actors of civil society and put into practice by, amongst others, the National Commission on Truth and Reconciliation, within youth education and schools, and in local communities. In a case study the work of the 'Centre for Conflict Resolution' is described. The authors point out that agreements on national level can not easily be transmitted to local actors. Those who are involved directly in conflicts, have to develop themselves the ability of reconciliation and the willingness for cooperation, in day-today local contexts of their own.

Exploitation and Overexploitation in Societies Past and Present

IUAES-Intercongress 2001 Goettingen

Human impact on landscape can be conceptualised in terms of socially governed ecological systems. In the past the adaptive capacity of human cultural systems has been emphasised. Nowadays, a shift can be recognised towards modified views. Resources are discussed as prerequisites for establishing complex human societies. This includes also a more biologically minded view from the standpoint of the humanities. In such a view, human societal complexes can be understood as systems that manage energy and matters. The concept of social-metabolic regimes has developed in such a context. Cultures, as seen within this paradigm, are not understood merely as autopoietic symbolic entities but as results of an interaction of material prerequisites and emerging social structures. One might dismiss this as an epistemological shift, part of the play of science with itself. But it remains unsolved so far in terms of evolutionary theory if the ultimate goal of evolution is reproductive success or accessibility to and optimising of energy resources. It becomes increasingly evident that man-nature-relationships which are strongly expressed in exploitation strategies will turn into the most decisive issue for the forthcoming century.

The Mediterraneans

Reworking the Past, Shaping the Present, Considering the Future This collection of articles supplements the previous issue on "The Mediterraneans. Transborder Movements and Diasporas" (vol. 9 (2000) no. 2). Both publications resonate with a shift in how Mediterranean cultures and societies are constructed in anthropological research and discourse today. Anthropology finds itself challenged by forms of social life and experience that are neither wholly traditional nor unambiguously modern, by social actors who in their own practices and attitudes are breaking down the divide between tradition and modernity. We are studying cultures that we can no longer mistake for those traditional communities whose invention anthropology was complicit with. In dealing with this challenge, a potentially transnational dialogue between anthropologists of various backgrounds has emerged - a dialogue that we especially hope to foster and support with this edition of AJEC.

Dunes and fossil soils

Dunes grow, change their shape and fade away. This book demonstrates that the evolution of eolian sand and dunes is under control of climatic change, permafrost, vegetational growth, soil formation and human interference. The European sand belt spreads from the Netherlands through Germany and Poland into Russia as inland dune fields up to a height of several meters as well as large carpets of thin eolian sand, the so-called coversand. This book illuminates the origin of this enormous sand masses from their first traces during the Saalian glaciation through the Weichselian glaciation up to present times. Periods of strong eolian activity change with periods of dune stability. The interior of the dunes exhibits striking interruptions of eolian activity by a large variety of fossil soils. The individual character of these soils allows to interpret the eolian sand movements period by period through the history of the last 150.000 years. All in all the book offers details of modern research on dune sand as well as comprehensive chapters of the recent state of knowledge on dune formation.

Mini Hydropower for Rural Development

A New Market-Oriented Approach to Maximize Electrification Benefits. With Special Focus on Indonesia Rural electrification enjoys high priority on Indonesia's development agenda. In remote villages located beyond the reach of national electricity grids, mini hydropower offers an environmentally friendly alternative to decentralized electricity generation. Technical assistance programs have successfully introduced mini hydro technology in developing countries but have often failed to attain sustainable plant operation. Mini Hydropower for Rural Development - A New Market-Oriented Approach to Maximize Electrification Benefits. With Special Focus on Indonesia provides insight into the multifaceted conditions under which village communities are struggling to keep systems running. A new approach linking productive electricity use and mini hydro operation is developed which incorporates experiences of market-oriented approaches in small enterprise development. Village communities are no longer left alone after the commissioning of the plants but are continuously provided need-oriented services. The study is exceptional in that the approach is experimentally applied in an actual project involving a village-owned coffee roastery. It is shown that the new approach not only contributes to a sustainable electricity supply but also to village development.

The Nile Question: Hydropolitics, Legal Wrangling, Modus Vivendi and Perspectives

I recommend Dr. Tafesse's book to all readers who wish to understand the hydro-political intricacies, legal debates and cooperative endeavors that have enveloped the Nile Basin. His comparative analysis with some other transboundary river basins in the Third World also makes the book relevant and worth reading to others who have an interest in water geopolitics.

The Germans, the Portuguese and India

German merchants emerged as influential commercial partners of the Portuguese in the 16th Century. The trade in spices and precious metals was not the only line pursued by them in India, they also collected precious stones and ventured far into the interior of the country. The present study illustrates these activities which have so far not received adequate attention. Moreover, not all of the Germans coming to India were merchants, there were also many soldiers, among them artillerymen (bombardeiros) who had skills to offer which had obviously not yet been acquired by the Portuguese military. The news about India which German merchants and soldiers conveyed to their home country contributed to the increase of German knowledge of the world.

Where 'Indians' Fear to Tread?

A Postmodern Reading of Louise Erdrich's North Dakota Quartet

The two fields of contemporary Native American literature and culture exist in the tension between two literary traditions: the Native oral and literary tradition and the modern Western mainstream literary influence. In her North Dakota quartet Love Medicine (1984), The Beet Queen (1986), Tracks (1988), The Bingo Palace (1994), Native American mixedblood author, Louise Erdrich (b. 1954) exemplifies where and how these traditions meet and interact. A postmodern reading of the quartet shows that Native American authors and literary critics alike need not be afraid to tread into postmodernism, since an interpretation from this perspective opens up the possibility of freeing Native American literature from the limiting label of "ethnic or minority literature" and of establishing it as a vital part of American literature.

This postmodern interpretation of Louise Erdrich's quartet offers a discussion of the theoretical issues involved in the context of ethnic writing and its relation to postmodernism, as well as an analysis of her intricate narrative strategies, in particular, her use of multiple perspectives and of intertextual techniques. The main part of the interpretation consists of a reading of postmodern concepts such as magical realism, carnivalesque humor, the relationship between reader and text, gender roles and sexual identities, history and textuality, the trickster figure, and games and chance as can be found in Louise Erdrich's North Dakota quartet.

Homosexuality in the Work of Gore Vidal

Since his first novel with a homosexual topic, The City and the Pillars, appeared in 1948, Gore Vidal has been seen as an enfant terrible of American letters. Through his ongoing writing career, he has examined (homo)sexuality in the context of cultural, religious and socio-political developments, so that it is fascinating to revisit his critical, sometimes cynical and always wittily presented ideas which were formed at a time when Gay Liberation, Gay Literature and Gay Identity were still unheard of and to discover the meaning these ideas still hold for us today.

The Rise and Fall of the Merina Empire

An economic history of Imperial Madagascar, 1750–1895. This is the first economic history of Madagascar, the "Great African Island", larger than France, Belgium and the Netherlands together. Based on pioneering research in European, American and African archives, the work analyses the economic basis for the rise and fall of the indigenous Merina empire, 1750–1895. The Merina rejected French and British influence and adopted autarkic policies central to which were an industrial experiment unique in Africa and contemporaneous (1826–61) with many western industrial projects, and the subjection of other peoples of the island to Merina imperial sway. The book examines why such policies failed and how this contributed to the French takeover in 1895. It also examines the importance of Madagascar in regional trade. Of particular note is the role of island, again unique in Africa, as a major importer as well as exporter of slaves. The first work to emphasise Madagascar's importance to the regional economy of East and South East Africa, this volume will be of major interest to historians of that region, as well as to Africanists in general.

The Power Beyond

Mission Strategies, African Conversion and the Development of a Christian Culture in the Transvaal

During the nineteenth century pietistic missionaries from the Hermannsburg and Berlin Mission Societies established more than fifty mission stations among the Sotho and the Tswana throughout the Transvaal. These mission stations became centres of social and religious interaction. On the mission stations Christianity and the world views compatible with it gradually took root among a growing number of converts while, at the same time, missionaries' families adapted to settler society.

For most of the period under review, formal conversions to Christianity remained small in number, yet Christian values and institutions became prevalent features among African societies long before Christianity emerged as a majority belief in its new surroundings. Missionary evangelical strategies and African conversions to Christianity were tested in the context of South African colonial politics and economic transformations. While in the Transvaal Christianity offered little scope for explicit political opposition, it opened up major fields of cultural innovation which, in due time, became the basis for new articulations of African social aspirations.

This study explores a mine of unpublished information Hermannsburg and Berlin mission archives provide. It attempts to prove that the detail we can build on Africans' experiences with Christianity is considerable if we carefully browse the riches of the mission archives.

Vol 1 – Production and Living Conditions: c. 1800–1920

This socio-economic history focuses on the agricultural population of an East African region characterized by a high environmental diversity. It demonstrates the crucial importance of the local agency in the shaping of living conditions during the transition from the upswing of the trans-regional trade in the late precolonial period to the beginnings of colonial development.

The Kingdom of Kazembe

History and Politics in North-Eastern Zambia and Katanga to 1950

This is the first full-length history of the kingdom of Kazembe, one of the principal and most enduring component of the Lunda 'commonwealth'. Unlike many kindred monographs, the book examines both the pre-colonial and the colonial trajectories of the eastern Lunda kingdom. This innovative approach reflects awareness of the pliability of historical consciousness and the extent to which oral sources were moulded by the colonial context.

Episode or Model in Modern History?

This book takes up a question raised about the nature of the European international system in the late eighteenth-early nineteenth centuries by Paul W. Schroeder's pathbreaking and controversial work, "The Transformation of European Politics, 1763–1848" (1994). Schroeder's central claim was that the European states system underwent a fundamental transformation in the revolutionary, Napoleonic, and Vienna eras from a system of competitive, conflictual power politics based purely on a shifting balance of power to a more consensual, stable, and peaceful set of relations based on legality, acknowledged rights and obligations, and shared norms. The contributors to this volume, while examining this claim, primarily extend the debate to the entire history of European and world international politics from the early seventeenth century to the present.

If this transformation was real, they ask, was it only a temporary episode, or does it represent an example of other transformations or structural changes in international politics over the centuries down to the present day, and a possible model for change in the future?

Beschreibung der moskauerischen Reise, welche ich Hans Georg Peyerle von Augsburg mit Herrn Andreasen Nathan und Matheo Bernhardt Manlichen dem Jüngeren, Ady 19 Marty Ao 1606 von Crachaw aus, angefangen, und was wir wahrhaftigen gehört, gesehen, und erfahren, alles aufs kürzest beschrieben, bis zu unserer Gott lob wider dahin ankunft den 15 Decembris Anno 1608. Edited, translated and annotated by G. Edward Orchard

Hans Georg Peyerle was an Augsburg jewel merchant allured to Moscow by the prospect of handsome profits on the occasion of the False Dmitry's marriage to Maryna Mniszech in May 1606. Instead he was caught up in the bloody events following the overthrow of the pretender and spent the next nineteen months as a virtual prisoner in the compound of the Polish ambassadors.

Peyerle has left us a detailed account of his ordeal, including rare reportage of the diplomatic exchanges between the ambassadors and the new government of Tsar Vasily Ivanovich Shuisky.

The Russian Socialist Revolutionary Party Before the First World War

The Socialist Revolutionary Party played an important role in the history of the Russian revolutionary movement. The author seeks to explain why this party—which continued the tradition of the 1870s—did not ultimately prevail in an agrarian country like the Tsarist empire. Using a wealth of printed sources and, for the first time, drawing upon materials from the archive of the Central Committee of the PSR, this study provides a detailed analysis of the theoretical foundations of the party as well as its organisational structure and political practice during the first Russian Revolution.

A Lesson Forgotten

Minority Protection under the League of Nations. The Case of the German Minority in Poland, 1920–1934

"The problem of how to protect minorities is an old one which has lost none of its relevance. This impressive study of the [MPS] of the League of Nations in relation to the German minority in Poland illuminates a classic example of the problem: the conflict between a new nation state and a previously powerful minority supported by an outside power, and at another level the conflict between a sovereign state and an international organization charged with upholding minority rights. Dr. Frenzt has made use of the extensive collection of minority petitions from the League of Nations' archive to produce an account that is both balanced and absorbing."

Jonathan R. C. Wright, Christ Church, University of Oxford

"With Europe once again seeing a revival of intense ethnic conflict, this is a very timely and welcome book. Based on very thorough research, it addresses many of the key issues raised by minority problems today and provides a shrewd assessment of the complexities involved in solving them. It ought to be required reading for members of international agencies involved in the Balkan crisis."

Intelligence and the War in Bosnia

1992–1995

In 1993 a combination of humanitarian motivation and political ambitions led the Dutch cabinet to make an Air Mobile Battalion available for the UNPROFOR mission in Bosnia. This took place amid wide political and media support and without a proper analysis of the far-reaching consequences beforehand. These were among the factors which led to Dutchbat being destined for Srebrenica, which had been turned down by other countries with arguments to back up their refusal, and being given the task of keeping the peace in a so-called 'safe' area where there was no peace. By playing down the possible risks of the behavior of the warring parties so much, a large circle of those involved in this policy, and in particular its advocates, took on a large responsibility for an ill-conceived and virtually impossible mission. This is the conclusion reached by the Netherlands Institute for War Documentation (NIOD) in the report which forms the basis for this book.

Clonmacnois – the Church and Lands of St. Ciarán

Change and Continuity in an Irish Monastic Foundation (6th to 16th Century)

Clonmacnois was one of the main ecclesiastical centres in early Christian Ireland. Yet no comprehensive work has hitherto been published which examines its history as an institution of religious, social and economic life. This book undertakes a detailed analysis of Clonmacnois before and during the age of reform and assesses possible reasons for its subsequent decline as an ecclesiastical centre. It traces the history of the former lay-ecclesiastical aristocracy down to the later Middle Ages, and, using previously neglected evidence surviving in seventeenth-century transcripts, sets out to reconstruct the extent of the former monastic lands.

Why Magna Carta?

Angevin England revisited

This book suggests that Magna Carta was not simply the product of the evil rule of King John but the culmination of unease with the Angevin government which went back to the reign of Henry II. It analyses the reasons for this unease, the expressions of discontent and the ways which the Angevins dealt with them. Royal opponents who, early on, began looking favourably to the Capetian court are also discussed as are the methods which the Capetian kings of France used to exploit the situation to their best advantage.

Socialism with DeficitsAn academic life in the German Democratic Republic. Edited from the private papers by Holger Stoecker Helmuth Stoecker was born in 1920 into a communist family in Berlin. In 1933 he had to emigrate to Great Britain after his father's arrestment by the Nazis. After his return in 1947 he started an academic career as historian at the Humboldt University in East Berlin. In the following years he became an important authority in the fields of German colonial history and African history. After German reunification and shortly before his death in 1994, Stoecker wrote down his impressions on academia. He attempted to explain his point of view of the rise and fall of socialism in the GDR. The book offers an insight view of the academic life as well as private thoughts on everyday life in the GDR.

Allied Control and German FreedomAmerican Political and Ideological Influences on the Framing of the West German Basic Law (Grundgesetz)
Although there is a virtual consensus among historians, political scientists, and legal scholars that the West German Basic Law (Grundgesetz) has been one of the great successes of recent European constitutional history, providing many decades of stability and the rule of law, a public myth, in effect ever since 1949, holds that it was a totally indigenous German achievement. Although attention has been paid to the overall role of the Allies in Germany between the end of World War II in 1945 and the ratification of the Basic Law in 1949, the present study is the first book-length attempt to describe and evaluate the specific political and ideological influences, direct and indirect, of the United States on the origins, development, and implementation of the Basic Law. It presents and analyzes American and German policies and personalities, parties and programs, and their interplay in the intriguing and subtle process of constitution-making.

Kenya Coast HandbookCulture, resources and development in the East African littoral. With a Preface by Prof. Ali A. Mazrui
The Kenya Coast poses a development enigma in more than one way. Historically it was part of the Indian Ocean world and its economy. With the coming of colonial rule and later nationhood, the political and economic allegiances inevitably changed. Economic and political power shifted to the centre of Kenya.
The coastal region is not richly endowed in natural resources but it has economic lynchpins in the port of Mombasa which serves Kenya and other East African countries, the tourism industry which has great potential and which flourished in previous decades but has recently shown a steep decline, and agriculture which so far serves mainly as a means of subsistence for large parts of the local population. Despite this potential the region finds itself in a marginal position.

This book traces the causes behind this situation and analyses it from different angles - political, economical and social. Authors from very different disciplines review resources, economy, people and history as well as the development potential and existing development limitations. The latter consist not only of infrastructural and human constraints but also of fragile coastal ecosystems, such as coral reefs, beaches and mangrove forests, that easily suffer from environmental degradation. This handbook, with a preface by Ali A. Mazrui, is an indispensable tool for anyone with a professional interest in the East African Coast. The book contains 26 chapters divided over 6 sections: Introduction, General background, People and history, Economic resources, Human resources, and Development issues. The book also contains a large bibliography and statistical information.

An Introduction to the Legal History of Ethiopia

1434 – 1974

The book is the first English-language overview of the history of Ethiopian law and describes the main features of its unique development on the basis of indigenous customary law and Roman-Byzantine law traditions. The study also pays attention to the processes of codification of laws and modernization of the judicial system, undertaken in the reign of Emperor Haile Sellassie (1930 – 1974), and to matters of procedural and court justice. Throughout the book, topics and domains for further research are identified.

Thera Rasing

The Bush Burnt, the Stones Remain

Female initiation rites in urban Zambia

Female initiation rites appear to be at odds with westernized urban society in present-day Zambia. This book offers an interpretation of the relevance of female initiation rites in an urban setting among today's 'modern' Christian women.

Female initiation rites are linked to gender relations. In this book changes in gender relations during the last few centuries and decades are examined on a socio-economic, religious and political level. Despite these changes, initiation rites remain of remarkable significance to women.

Historical Reality or Metaphoric Expression?

Culturally formed contrasts in Karl Florenz' and Iida Takesato's interpretations of Japanese mythology

Historical Reality or Metaphoric Expression? elucidates the differing interpretations on Japanese mythology by the German philologist and historian Karl Florenz (1865 – 1939) and the Japanese kokugakusha Iida Takesato (1828 – 1900) at the end of the 19th century. Iida in his Nihonshoki-tsūshaku and Florenz in his Japanische Mythologie approached a comparable endeavor from very different vantage points. It is shown how their distinct cultural formation, their education and upbringing within unlike academic discourses, and their life within a variety of intellectual, social and political milieus formed their different scholarly outlook and methodology in interpreting and commenting on the Nihongi-myths.

Comparing both scholars, their work and their mutual relation, we can find a very interesting interaction of cultural and scholarly traditions. Based on translations of both works, this study juxtaposes Iida's 'emic' inner view on Japanese mythology with the 'etic' outside view of Florenz, and at the same time provides the first portrayal of life and work of these two eminent scholars in English.

Religion and National Identity in the Japanese ContextThe subject of Religion and National Identity in the Japanese Context focuses upon the relationship between religion and socio-cultural or socio-political aspects in the history of religions in Japan.

Religious and ideological justifications in the course of forming a political and national identity, and the mutual relation between political, national and cultural issues can be noticed in every region of the world before the onset of secularization processes, but also in modern nation-states today. In Japan as well, just like in most modern societies, political, cultural and religious elements are closely interrelated. In a comparative approach the sixteen papers in this volume elucidate the intellectual undercurrent in Japanese history of putting positive perspectives on national achievements and cultural-religious uniqueness into service of establishing and refurbishing a national identity.

Memory, Narrativity, Self and the Challenge to Think God

The Reception within Theology of the Recent Work of Paul Ricoeur

The focus of his theological reception is in Christian Ethics where his categories are seen as most fruitful in conceptualizing relationships between biographical, moral and religious identity. The concept of narrativity as mediating between the normative ethics of the Kantian tradition and the ethics of striving or virtue ethics of the Neoaristotelians, Hille Haker's contribution explores this theme. In Systematic Theology, Werner Jeanrond and Janet Soskice discuss Ricoeur in the context of the hermeneutics of revelation and of prior attempts of "naming God" by Christian thinkers such as Augustine. Christoph Mandry shows from the perspective of Philosophical or Foundational Theology how Ricoeur is inclined to deny the challenge not simply to proclaim God but also to think the concept of God in the history of the dialectic between the human self and God within Continental European philosophy. In Practical Theology, John van den Hengel outlines Ricoeur's contribution to a theory of Christian praxis.

German Protestants Remember the Holocaust

Theology and the Construction of Collective Memory
Drawing on the methodology of collective memory this dissertation analyses representations of the Holocaust and Jews in three German Protestant theological texts (Rheinischer Synodalbeschluss 1980, F.-W. Marquardt's Von Elend und Heimsuchung der Theologie and B. Jüngst's Auf der Seite des Todes das Leben). The analysis of these texts is informed by the development of narratives of collective memory of the Holocaust in German society in the 1980s and 1990s (the miniseries Holocaust and Heimat, the Bitburg Controversy, the Historikerstreit and the Goldhagen Controversy) and by the study of generational transmission of Holocaust memory in the third generation of non-Jewish Germans. In particular, the paradigms generated by Christian reflection on the Holocaust and Jews and their consequences for current Christian-Jewish relations in Germany are addressed. The theological narrative of this study becomes increasingly complex through the inclusion of social and generational issues of Holocaust remembrance in Germany.

Missing Links

Arts, Religion and Reality

Are there "missing links", links that are "easy to miss" between art and religion and between the ways in which they respond to or partake of reality? The hypothesis of this anthology is that these in fact do exist and its authors explore these links on the basis of a specific text or oeuvre, a specific artwork or exhibition. Following an introductory essay exploring the discussion on relating art and religion, there are articles on Jannis Kounellis and Andrew Forster, on plays by William Shakespeare, Gerard Jan Rijnders and Anny van Hoof, on an exhibition curated by Julia Kristeva. There is an analysis of a novel by Frederic Buechner and one of the autobiographical writings of Dorothy Day. Poems of M. Vasalis and Judith Herzberg are considered, along with the music of Olivier Messiaen and Plato's dialogue 'Sophist'.

Common Bodies

Everyday Practices, Gender and Religion

The gendered body in its common, everyday activities and references is the central focus of this book. Recognizing the highly abstract and often 'disembodied' character of contemporary discussions on 'the body' in relation to gender, subjectivity and discourse, the authors of this anthology start their inquiries at a more mundane level by studying 'common bodies': human bodies and bodily practices in daily situations of (domestic) work and care, of sex, love and violence, and of prayer and ritual. From this angle of 'corporeal agency' they discuss the meaning of religion, religiosity, transcendence and/or Divinity.

Dynamics of Symbol and Dialogue: Interreligious Education in India

The Relevance of Raimon Panikkar's Intercultural Challenge
To remain relevant religious traditions have to come in touch with one another's symbolic world of meaning. For this interreligious education is necessary because it leads to the discovery of the interrelationship of traditions, promotes collaboration on projects of universal welfare and gives direction and content to interreligious dialogue. The aim is to realize unity in difference and to work for the transformation of society and the cosmos (which holds the human family together) through commitment to justice and peace. This could make traditions concretize their vision of the Infinite.

Religious Individualization and Christian Religious Semantics

In the western world, there is a change in religion. Some researchers speak of a general secularisation in the sense of a decline of religion in general. Other researchers claim that religion, represented by the dominant churches in particular, are losing importance. A third group are discovering religious vitality to be an inherent dimension of modernity. The analytical profit might be the greatest if empirical researchers succeed in achieving some sort of balance between functional and substantial dimensions of religion. This is what the authors of this book want to do. It is in this balance that the task of practical theology lies: to reflect on the tension between traditional Christian religion and actual religious practice and to open up perspectives for action in the pastoral practice and teaching.

Imagining God

Empirical Explorations from an international perspective
Is the question of God still relevant for our time? Empirical studies from an international perspective show the fact that there are both indications of God's importance and disappearance. The articles deal with questions related to the content, structure and function of images of God. The studies document the actual variety and forms of religious practice and highlight the issues of God present – out of necessity from an ecumenical and interdisciplinary point of view. If and how the question of God is asked is not only of denominational interest, but is also of a cultural importance for the individual and public life in Europe. The empirical studies in this collection were discussed at the "Würzburg Research Days – Practical Theology" in December 2000.

The Individual and Community in African Religions

"This book treats the subject of African religions in a creative and interesting way emphasizing that these religions are genuine, authentic expressions of religiosity on a par with other religions including the so-called world religions. The author provides an excellent account of the nature interdependence between individual, community, society and the natural order, an interdependence which these religions symbolize and express in ritual and belief. Likewise the essentially personal nature of power as conceived in African culture is thoughtfully and interestingly analysed.

There are many other thought provoking ideas and interpretations in this volume including the deconstruction of the commonly held notions of the distinction between witchcraft and magic. This is a most worthwhile contribution to the study of Africa's traditional religions and I am convinced all those with an interest in Africa who read it will gain much therefrom". Professor Peter B. Clarke, Professor of the History and Sociology of Religion in the University of London at King's College, and formerly Professor of African History at the University of Ibadan, Nigeria.

After Pluralism

Towards an Interreligious Ethic

Do the religions cause war, or is their tendency to intensify violence outweighed by their potential for peace? Are multicultural societies, as Huntington thinks, condemned to ethnic conflict, or is a specifically interreligious ethic emerging from their new patterns of relationships? This book examines the liberal agenda of dialogue and pluralism and finds that we need a more radical approach involving indigenous peoples, women and the poor if we are to find solutions – together – to the problems of economic injustice and the threat of ecological degradation. It contains the Ethel Hayton Lectures delivered at the University of Wollongong, Australia, in 1994.

The History of the Church

The aim of this book is as modest as it is ambitious. It sees itself both as a manual of the history of the church, and as an essay. The manual is of service to the students of theology and at the same time lays open to them the problems linked to the subject of their studies. The first and foremost aim of the book however is to offer an overall view of the 2000 years of the history of the Catholic Church and the other Christian denominations. It is the history of highs and failures, of incidents and events as reactions to the different challenges to the faith and the church. It is the story of breakdowns leading to new starts, of conversions and continuous building up, and this gives the story its particular rhythm, against which the believer always tries to separate the wheat from the chaff, as a means to discover the finger of God, who writes in the sand of history. From that point of view the book is an essay in the true sense of the word.

The Church's Liturgy

Throughout all changes of time and across all cultural differences, the liturgy of the Church is only possible as a response to the service which God has always rendered. The Divine Service is first of all an expression of God's service to the Church, of his work for his own son's many sisters and brothers; only then is the capable of celebrating the liturgy as a response to God's action. The idea of life-creating, even deifying communication, between God and man is the central theme of the book. The first part deals with God's descent towards man, the catabatic dimension of the liturgy as God's invitation to man to enter the divine fullness of life. The second part is concerned with man's acceptance of this invitation, with man's ascent to God, the anabatic dimension of the liturgy. Those two parts from the general liturgiology, the following four parts are dedicated to special liturgical subjects: the celebration of the Eucharist, the sacraments and the benedictions, the liturgy of the Hours and other common services, the ecclesiastical year. The object of this publication, beyond a simple transfer of information, is to arouse and confirm the love of the liturgy, of God's service to the multitude, and the service of the many believers for the greater glory of God.

The Virtues, or the Examined Life

The characteristic feature of the Christian moral life remains the very person of Jesus Christ. As the Eternal Word of the Father, Christ supplies the universal, personal, and concrete norm for all moral comportment. When human action flows from the agent's union with Christ, human freedom meets up with its own graced source of energy. From the moment that a human creature encounters the triune God, the creature discovers who he is: For when God chooses a person to share in the blessed communion of his own life, the individual achieves a quality of personal being that only God can bestow. The more authentic our relationship with the Persons of the blessed Trinity becomes, the more the divine life takes hold of us and, through the virtues, shapes our daily actions. This new book treats the virtues of the Christian life from a Trinitarian perspective. The chapters pursue a common theme: To show believers how they can decide what is morally good and, by embracing the moral good, grow to the full stature of Christ's own loving kindness. To achieve this aim, the text treats in an innovative and fresh manner both the theological virtues, faith, hope, and charity, as well as the cardinal moral virtues, prudence, justice, fortitude, and temperance. The author also reflects on allied questions of moral theology and so provides a significant commentary on the third part of the Catechism of the Catholic Church.

Canon Law

One of the main demands of Vatican II Council with respect to Canon Law was to always focus on the mystery of the Church. This clear and distinct position led to a renewal of the methodology applied to the discipline of Canon Law in almost all post-conciliar "schools". The canonistic demand however, similarly to change the didactic tools, the teaching material, in this new context has proved to be less significant. Knowing the importance and the urgency of this initiative has been a strong source of motivation to the author.

The leading and inspiring idea behind this initiative is the conviction that the formal principles of Canon Law, both as the inner structure of the Church community as well as a proper scientific method, are the three fundamental elements of the constitution of the Church: the Word, the Sacrament and Charisma.

Normativity and Legitimacy

Proceedings of the II Meeting Italian-American Philosophy – New York 1999

This volume contains the Proceedings of the Second Meeting Italian-American Philosophy, that took place in New York from 12 to 15 October 1999, together with two contributions given during the First Meeting. It is the first volume of a Yearbook for Philosophical Hermeneutics, The Dialogue, actually aiming to promote the dialogue between analytic and hermeneutic philosophy.

Normativity and legitimacy are the two key concepts which have been at the base of the confrontation between the thought of the Frankfurt School and most of the American philosophy. They can offer the possibility for further discussions and developments within the fields of aesthetics, logic, and language philosophy, epistemology, ethics, philosophy of law and politics. They also represent the ground on which the two different aspects of contemporary philosophy, that one of hermeneutic dealing with historical legitimacy, and the one of analytics dealing with rational determination of norms, could together establish a productive dialogue.

Health and Quality of Life

Philosophical, Medical, and Cultural Aspects

How could one define health and disease? On what presuppositions, and ought we look for such definitions? Does quality of life inherit a subjective or objective evaluation? Are health and quality of life culture dependent concepts? Under the conditions of technologically advanced medicine and the common tendency towards a hedonistic lifestyle such questions come into focus. Hence, one question is of special relevance: which role does health play in our quality of life? The contributions of this interdisciplinary volume aim at the clarification of the various concepts in use. Internationally well-known scholars and scientists such as Alfred Musschenga, Alfons Labisch, Lennart Nordenfeit, Peter Janich, Henrik Wulff and several others outline the framework for a more comprehensive and demanding concept of health and quality of life including philosophical and cultural aspects as well as medical and psychological dimensions.

Advances and Problems in the Philosophy of Technology

The Proceedings of the Karlsruhe Academic Session (1997) of the International Academy of the Philosophy of the Sciences cover the topic of philosophy of technology. Half a dozen of other pertinent topical papers have been added in order to extend the topics dealt with and to reach a rather comprehensive overview of this multi-ramified field. Nowadays philosophy of technology is not only confronted with new, anthropological and social as well as political problems to deal with, but also with methodological problems of the mutual interactions between science and technology, with problems of reliability and viability of technology assessment, e. g. with risks, environmental and social impact assessments. The importance and necessity of a philosophy and a practice-oriented ethics of technology will drastically rise and grow in the near future.

John McDowell is one of the most influential philosophers writing today. His work, ranging from interpretations of Plato and Aristotle to Davidsonian semantics, from ethics to epistemology and the philosophy of mind, has set the agenda for many recent philosophical debates. This volume contains the proceedings of the third Münsteraner Vorlesungen zur Philosophie which McDowell delivered in 1999: A lecture, entitled "Experiencing the World", introduces into the set of ideas McDowell developed in his groundbreaking book Mind and World. The lecture is followed by ten brief essays, both interpretative and critical, in which students and faculty from the Department of Philosophy at the University of Münster discuss various aspects of McDowell's philosophy. The volume ends with responses by John McDowell.

Martha C. Nussbaum: Ethics and Political Philosophy

Lecture and Colloquium in Münster 2000

The philosophical writings of Martha C. Nussbaum, Professor of Law at the University of Chicago, are distinguished by their synthesis of different research areas and by their treatment of current, socially controversial issues. In her ethical and political philosophy, Nussbaum gives detailed readings of works from ancient Greece and Rome, interpreting classical texts with a view to their relevance for contemporary questions. Her "capabilities approach", developed through her work on Aristotle, has become an established part of political philosophy and of the ethics of the good life. Spurred by her involvement with international organizations, Nussbaum has also employed her philosophical program to confront and investigate ways of solving problems of social justice. In this volume, Nussbaum's work is examined in the context of current philosophical debates, with discussions other thinking on the relationship of literature and ethics, on feminism, on the politics of international development, and on the idea of cosmopolitanism.

Central Auditory Deficits

Two Case Reports including PET Activation Studies on Recovery Phenomena

Higher-order functions of auditory perception such as the recognition of complex acoustic signals can be disturbed after brain lesions, as e. g. after suffering from a stroke. Patients suffering from these disorders, such as cortical deafness, auditory agnosia, and word deafness, were examined with neuropsychological and neurophysiological techniques (EEG and PET). New hearing tests were developed to understand the functional deficits in more detail and monitor the clinical course longitudinally. With the functional neuroimaging technique of positron emission tomography (PET), the cerebral mechanisms underlying recovery of auditory perceptual functions are demonstrated.

Educational Philosophies and Political Systems

In the current debate about educational reform, this volume tries to correct misconceptions about the university systems on both sides of the Atlantic. Leading experts from both countries – university presidents, high-ranking administrators and university professors from several fields – address basic differences between the egalitarian German and the diversified and hierarchical American system and discuss the following topics:

structure and governance of universities: the role of legislatures and governments, boards, university administrations, and faculties;
models of costs and funding, including the question of tuition;
functions, rights and duties of professors and teaching staff;
diversity and minority representation among faculty and students;
student access, expectations and performance;
teaching vs. research, with a glance at the role of research-supporting endowments.

Arts – Therapies – Communication

On the Way to a Communicative European Arts Therapy.

Volume I

The publication ARTS – THERAPIES – COMMUNICATION is designed as two volumes, the first of which is on hand here. It deals with art therapy studies from Great Britain and the non-European countries, the authors are academics and practitioners. A second volume will offer topic-related contributions from other European regions and countries. Under the auspices of the European Consortium for Art Therapies Education (ECARTE) a European art therapy, which is concerned with the development of a European-oriented discipline with training and fostering of successors at universities, is articulating itself. This publication is aimed at art therapists, music therapists, drama and dance therapists but also at psychotherapists and clinical psychologists, teachers, sociologists and doctors. With regard to method and theory different directions and psychoanalytical approaches are represented and it also addresses a wide spectrum of clinical and non-clinical contexts and illnesses. In this way diverse interests in art therapy can be satisfied.

Professionals in Vocational and Technical Education – International Perspectives

Professional Situation and Life-long Learning of Teachers and Instructors in Technical and Vocational Education

In the context of knowledge-intensive international competition and trade with high-quality products the education and training of the workforce is widely acknowledged to play major role in the strive for competitive advantages. Indisputably, the education and training and the professional competence of the staff involved in vocational education and training and human resource development is a major factor for the success of learning processes. An internationally accessible and up-to-date publication on the state of the art and perspectives of professionalisation of teachers, lecturers and trainers involved in vocational and technical education, training and human resources development serves two purposes. First, it provides a helpful informational basis for stakeholders, researchers and practitioners engaged in the field of international and national vocational education and training. Secondly, it contributes to the further development of the profession itself and enhances the exchange of qualified personnel.

On ca. 350 pages scholars from 13 different countries (Brazil, China, Denmark, Germany, Greece, France, Hungary, Japan, Korea, Russia, Switzerland, UK and USA) present their countries' professional traditions and future perspectives with regard to the specific occupational groups involved in the professional organisation of learning processes. The Volume will be opened with a chapter embedding it into the international discourse on Vocational Education and Training and Human Resource Development and will be closed with a comparative chapter pointing out national and transnational development perspectives.

Civil Society, Citizenship and Learning

Writing the story of democracy might seem like writing a story of success. In more and more countries all over the world democracy has been established as the leading form of government.

However, democracy also has a less positive and optimistic side. Political scandals and corruption continue to shatter people's trust in its promises and institutions. This brings us to the topic of active democratic citizenship and civil society. Since the late 1980s these topics have continued to rise in importance in the fields of social and political sciences, and their influence has yet to reach a peak.

In comparison, civil society and citizenship remain relatively new topics for adult education, dating to the beginning of the 1990s. We also see that the respective national discourses within the different European countries differ immensely. Whereas the discourse on adult education and active democratic citizenship is quite lively in Great Britain or in Poland, in Germany there is only very little interest.

"Civil Society, Citizenship and Learning", the second volume of the Bochum Studies in International Adult Education, presents a variety of different perspectives on the topics of citizenship and civil society. The goal of this book is to give an overview of the European discourse on citizenship and civil society as well as on the discourse in some selected countries. Writing the story of democracy might seem like

Social Science Theories in Adult Education Research

The relationship between adult education research and theory is one of tension. On the one hand, there are several empirical studies carried out without any theoretical guidance. On the other hand, there is theorising and theory building taking place without any empirical support. "Social Science Theories in Adult Education Research", the third volume of the Bochum Studies in International Adult Education pleads for the importance of the combination of empirical and theoretical work in a symbiotic way. Good empirical studies need theoretical guidance and good theory building needs a solid empirical basis. Thus the book explores and displays the most often used theories and theoretical perspectives in adult education research in the last decade within the European discourse and analyses their potentials for adult education research.

The articles presented in this volume have a more or less similar underlying structure. They display the most important contours of the theory or perspective in question; they analyse and discuss the relation to adult education research, focussing on examples of other researcher's work and own research; and they give an outlook of what can be expected of the respective paradigm in the future.

Majestic Milton

British Imperial Expansion and Transformations of Paradise Lost, 1667 – 1837

This study investigates how Milton's texts, above all Paradise Lost, were read in the context of eighteenth- and early-nineteenth-century British empire building. Milton's epic was implicated in the articulation and criticism of early modern colonialist discourse; it also lent itself easily to later imperial and anti-imperial appropriations. Milton the 'national poet' emerged from the strife between Whigs and Tories for his legacy; this book analyses Milton's presence in a number of discourses that are characteristic of the Whig model of secular history: the discourses about empire, language and literary criticism, travelling and astronomy, agriculture, commerce and Pax Britannica, as well as the slave-trade. The temporal frame extends from the Restoration through the loss of the American colonies to the Second British Empire and 'Milton in India'. Eighteenth-century British national epics, commented Milton editions and poetic Milton recreations invented a tradition for the British Empire and reintroduced the Virgilian concept of translatio imperii, transforming Milton's allegories of divine power into descriptions of secular authority. This study contextualizes traditional stories about 'Milton and Romanticism' by examining mostly 'minor' writers; still, Dryden, Johnson, Pope and Blake feature in some detail. The epilogue shows that even postcolonial rewritings of Milton make more sense in the light of the eighteenth-century Milton and his presence in the nineteenth-century British colonial education syllabus.

Writing Women Across Borders and Categories

Generally held to be rigid, borders and categories are nonetheless expanded when those bounded by the demarcations of hegemony, challenge its strictures. Significant instances of this constructive transgression can be found in the women's writing with which this collection of essays by international critics engages. Whereas in travel writing by women (Sarah Hobson, Dervla Murphy, Jan Morris) 'transgression' is seen to have settled into a familiar strategy, in autobiography (Ann Fanshawe, Margaret Cavendish, Christine Brooke-Rose), cultural analysis (Virginia Woolf, Marianna Torgovnick, Donna Haraway), and fiction (Michelle Cliff, Jeanette Winterson, Ellen Galford, Fiona Cooper), women have succeeded in creating an innovative space for themselves.

"Do you consider yourself a postmodern author?"

Interviews with Contemporary English Writers

This book presents a collection of twelve interviews with eminent English contemporary writers held during a period of four years. The book allows an illuminating insight into a very lively and thought-provoking literary culture, stirred not only by recent ideas of post-modernism but also by the manifold issues of nationality, culture, and gender subjected to permanent redefinitions towards the end of the twentieth century. The interviews with Peter Ackroyd, John Banville, Julian Barnes, Alain de Botton, Mau reen Duffy, Tibor Fischer, John Fowles, Romesh Gunesekeera, Tim Parks, Terry Pratchett, Jane Rogers, and Adam Thorpe cover topics such as the relationship between writer and public, the role of the literary tradition, the relevance of contemporary literary theory for the production of literature, images of nationality, intertextuality, changes in the attitude towards language and meaning, and the reception of literary texts by critical reviewers and literary critics.

All the interviewees have worked for the ECCEL (Erlangen Centre for Contemporary English Literature).

Mapping African America

History, Narrative Formation, and the Production of Knowledge
The world of African America extends throughout the northern, central, southern and insular parts of the American continent. The essays included in this volume take the creation of that world as a single object of study, tracing significant routes and contacts, building comparisons and contrasts. They thus participate in the reworking of traditional approaches to the study of history, the critique of literature and culture, and the production of knowledge. All are engaged in an effort to locate the African American experience within a wider pan-African vision that links the colonial with the postcolonial, the past with the present, the African with the Western.

Liberating Narratives

The Authorization of Black Female Voices in African American Women Writers' Novels of Slavery

Three contemporary novels of slavery – Margaret Walker's Jubilee (1966), Sherley Anne Williams's Dessa Rose (1986) and Toni Morrison's Beloved (1987) – are the central focus of Liberating Narratives. In significantly different ways that reflect their individual and socio-political contexts of origin, these three novels can all be read as critiques of historical representation and as alternative spaces for remembrance – 'sites of memory' – that attempt to shift the conceptual ground on which our knowledge of the past is based.

Paradise Reconsidered

Toni Morrison's (Hi)stories and Truths

Toni Morrison's Paradise (1998) arrived on the scene amid vociferous acclaim and much consternation. Third in the trilogy begun with Beloved and Jazz, this fascinating yet complicated novel has sown as much confusion as admiration. How does it work? How does the novel close the trilogy? Indeed, a major complaint among reviewers, why does Morrison overload us with so many characters and stories? In this first book-length study of Paradise, Justin Tally securely links the work to Morrison's entire oeuvre and effectively argues that while all of the novels of the trilogy are deeply analytical of the relationship of memory, story and history, the historical narrative: memory is fickle, story is unreliable, and history is subject to manipulation. A master narrative of the past is again dictated by the dominant discourse, but this time the control exerted is black und male, not white and male. Though this stranglehold threatens to deaden life and put the future on hold, Morrison's narrative disruptions challenge the very nature of this "paradise" on earth.

The Civil Rights Movement Revisited

Critical Perspectives on the Struggle for Racial Equality in the United States

The crusade for civil rights was a defining episode of 20th century U.S. history, reshaping the constitutional, political, social, and economic life of the nation. This collection of original essays by both European and American scholars includes close analyses of literature and film, historical studies of significant themes and events from the turn-of-the-century to the movement years, and assessments of the movement's legacies. Ultimately, the articles help examine the ways civil rights activism, often grounded in the political work of women, has shaped American consciousness and culture until the outset of the 21st century.

Black Liberation in the Americas

The recognition that Africans in the Americas have also been subjects of their destiny rather than merely passive objects of European oppression represents one of the major shifts in twentieth-century mainstream historiography. Yet even in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, slave narratives and abolitionist tracts offered testimony to various ways in which Africans struggled against slavery, from outright revolt to day-to-day resistance. In the first decades of the twentieth century, African American historians like Carter G. Woodson and W.E.B. Du Bois started to articulate a vision of African American history that emphasized survival and resistance rather than victimization and oppression. This volume seeks to address these and other issues in black liberation from interdisciplinary and comparative perspectives, focusing on such issues as slave revolts, day-to-day resistance, abolitionist movements, maroon societies, the historiography of resistance, the literature of resistance, black liberation movements in the twentieth century, and black liberation and post colonial theory. The chapters span the disciplines of history, literature, anthropology, folklore, film, music, architecture, and art, drawing on the black experience of liberation in the United States, the Caribbean, and Latin America.

The Story of Jazz

Toni Morrison's Dialogic Imagination

Ever since its publication in 1992, Jazz, probably Toni Morrison's most difficult novel to date, has elicited a wide array of critical response. Many of these analyses, while both thoughtful and thought-provoking, have provided only partial or inherently inconclusive interpretations. The title, and certain of the author's own pronouncements, have led other critics to focus on the music itself, both as medium and aesthetic support for the narration.

Passing Novels in the Harlem Renaissance

An Alternative Concept of African American Identity

This book offers an analysis of the unique and significant contribution of "passing" novels to the literary and intellectual debate of the Harlem Renaissance, especially to the search for a definition of a concept of African American identity. The analysis reveals the presence of a subversive component in these novels, turning them into useful tools to explore the "passing" phenomenon in all its richness and complexity. The present study intends to contribute to the ongoing revision of the parameters conventionally employed to analyze "passing" novels by drawing attention to the enormous significance this subgenre entails for the establishment of a coherent and more inclusive African American literary canon.

Asian American Literature in the International Context

Readings on Fiction, Poetry, and Performance

In their different and yet complementary perspectives, all of the essays in Asian American Literature in the International Context: Readings on Fiction, Poetry, and Performance reiterate the universal lesson of pluralism. They are divided into sections that deal with biraciality and biculturalism, interethnic negotiations, poetic creations, narrative experiments, and (re)constructing self. The wide variety of approaches reflects the contributors' training in different cultures and across cultures. It showcases refreshing new perspectives in reading that combine the views of literary scholars from three different continents. This collection creates a space for discussion and commentary, of heightened appreciation and increased creativity, a forum that turns the discipline of Asian American Studies into a truly intercultural debate.

Modernism and the Individual Talent/Moderne und besondere Begabung

Re-Canonizing Ford Madox Ford (Hueffer)/Zur Re-Kanonisierung von Ford Madox Ford (Hüffer). Symposium Münster June/June 1999

Following their first gathering in Münster, Westphalia, the city of Ford's ancestors, Fordians present a multi-faceted image of this Anglo-German and francophile English Modernist. International interest in the Hueffers' German background will be triggered by two articles on Franz Hüffer and the references to Münster and Westphalia in Ford's writings. Excursions in politics and poetry and Ford in context provide a framework for "Aspects of Parade's End", the edition and simultaneous translation of which into major European languages forms the most important project for the new Millennium.

From Anti-Apartheid to African Renaissance

Interviews with South African Writers and Critics on Cultural Politics Beyond the Cultural Struggle

The focus of this collection is the cultural and literary policy of the tripartite alliance (ANC, SACP, COSATU) after its denouncement of 'culture as a weapon'. Three shifts are noted between 1990–2000: the end of apartheid, the alliance's accession to power, and the change of presidency from Nelson Mandela to Thabo Mbeki, including the adoption of a neo-liberal macro-economic policy.

The investigation stresses the importance of the role of writers and intellectuals in political and societal transformation processes that have a tendency to destroy the agency that initially set them in motion. Startling revelations are being made, which highlight the emptiness of much Rainbow Nation sloganeering.

Language and Exclusion

The Consequences of Language Politics in Africa
Ayo Bamgbose's new book focuses on the problem of language exclusion arising from language policies, particularly in countries in Sub-Saharan Africa. The collection is based on a set of lectures given in South Africa in March 1998. The individual chapters largely preserve the style of presentation. This makes it a very readable book and an easy-to-read introduction to some of the salient points of African sociolinguistics. Because of the original audience for which the lectures were intended, special references to the South African language situation will be found. In its Appendices, the book offers access to some of the most important documents on language policies such as the OAU's Language Plan of Action For Africa (1986), the language provisions in the Constitution of the Federal Republic of South Africa (1996), and from the Barcelona Universal Declaration on Linguistics Rights.

It has been only recently that the long drawn out international negotiations conducted in the U.S. on the subject of the finalization of reparations to be paid by Germany to the, mainly Jewish, forced laborers of the National Socialist regime were concluded. The American-Jewish aspect of the broader subject of involvement with the aftermath of the Holocaust has already evoked an echo of wide-ranging discussions in the recently published works of Wolf Calebow, Peter Novick and Norman Finkelstein.

Interpretation of the Sacred – Interpretation of Law

The hermeneutic path involved in the interpretation of law as well as in the Interpretation of sacred texts, though peculiar, seems – as Emilio Betti pointed out – to share several things, most importantly the “normative” nature of interpretation. The 1999 issue of the Yearbook “Ars Interpretandi” accounts for the several and disparate relationships between these two important “regional hermeneutics”.

Translation in Law

The 2000 issue of the Yearbook deals with the concept of translation. From the perspectives of philosophy of language, theology, comparative law and jurisprudence, such a notion is here addressed both in itself and in its many-sided relationships with the concept of interpretation.

Business Associations in the Common Law World

Written by Anglo-American lawyers with decades of practical experience between them, this book introduces students and practitioners to the economic objectives, legal principles, and practical considerations that characterize the partnerships, corporations, and other business associations who control a major part of the wealth in the “Anglosphere” of the United States, United Kingdom, Ireland, and the Commonwealth countries. Having no physical existence as such, these entities are nevertheless treated as legal “persons” by the law. This book brings these businesses in their various forms to life, revealing how they are formed, operated, regulated, taxed, sued, and dissolved.

God created woman for man's pleasure, so man should enjoy her. If she no longer pleases him, he should discard her. That is the kernel of the creed of the apostle of power, Niccolò Machiavelli, revealed in this hitherto unpublished manuscript, which has been religiously translated, and cautiously updated, by Prof. Thomas Lundmark to preserve the puissance of the original. In this book Machiavelli leaves the world of geopolitics behind, and enters the era of biopolitics. He satirizes our times and offers frank observations on winning strategies in the battle of the sexes.
